

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE OF CONTRACTS.

E. E. WOOTTON

A TREATISE
ON THE SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE OF CONTRACTS.

BY
THE RIGHT HON. SIR EDWARD FRY,
ONE OF THE LORDS JUSTICES OF APPEAL.

THE THIRD EDITION
BY THE AUTHOR AND EDWARD PORTSMOUTH FRY,
OF LINCOLN'S INN, ESQ., BARRISTER-AT-LAW, M.A.

“Not what thou and I have promised to each other, but what the balance of our forces can make us perform to each other, that, in so sinful a world as ours, is the thing to be counted on.”

PREFACE

TO THE THIRD EDITION.

THE Second Edition of this book was by myself and Mr. William Donaldson Rawlins, of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-law, M.A., and late Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge. The extent and importance of his assistance may be learned from the Preface to the Second Edition. In the present Edition I have been assisted by my son.

All the important decisions which have been pronounced on the subjects discussed since the Second Edition have, it is hoped, been referred to.

In some matters relative to the former practice of the Court of Chancery I have thought it reasonable, having regard to the lapse of time since the Judicature Acts came into operation, to be more brief than in the Second Edition. Thus the old practice in regard to references of title and the question as to parol variation being set up by the plaintiff are more briefly treated than before.

In respect to the following matters, some considerable changes or additions have been introduced: the origin and early history of the jurisdiction in specific performance; the case of Bolton Partners v. Lambert (treated of in an additional note); the contracts of married women, especially under the Act of 1882.

Whilst this book has been passing through the press, the volume of the Selden Society's publications, entitled "The Court Baron," edited by Professor Maitland and Mr. Baildon, has appeared. It contains, amongst other things, an account of entries in the rolls of the Bishop of Ely's Court at Littleport, near that city, during the reign of Edward II.; and it is curious to find that the fen-men of that early date were attempting, by means of distress, to enforce specific performance of their contracts. In one case the defendant had contracted to make the plaintiff a thousand of sedge; in another to make a new "rother" (i.e., according to Halliwell, a rudder); and in both cases an order was made to distrain the defendant to make the thing he had contracted for (p. 115). In the text of my book I have not been able to do more than briefly refer to these entries. It is curious to find this out-of-the-way Court in the Fens in advance, in the development of jurisprudence, of the King's Courts and of the Chancery; and yet such seems to have been the position of things in the reign of our second Edward.

The explanation may perhaps be found in the fact that the Lord of the Manor was a high ecclesiastic; that cases of difficulty or importance arising in the Court at Littleport might be reserved for the Bishop's Court or Council (Consilium) at Ely; that an aggrieved litigant might complain to the Bishop, and obtain a writ to the steward commanding him to do right ("The Court Baron," p. 111); and that in these ways it seems probable that the doctrine of specific performance may have leaked through from the Canon into the Manorial Law.

I was never more conscious than now of the defects of this book; and I believe that I could now write a better treatise on the subject. But for such a labour I have neither time nor inclination.

PREFACE

TO THE SECOND EDITION.

MORE than twenty years have passed away since I first wrote and published the following treatise: and in that space of time great changes have been effected in the law—and a great volume of decisions bearing on the subject of this essay has been pronounced.

I must expect a severer criticism for this second edition than that with which the first edition was received: but I am sure that the kindness which I have always received from the members of my profession will not fail me now.

There is one notion often expressed with regard to works written or revised by authors on the Bench, which seems to me in part at least erroneous—the notion, I mean, that they possess a quasi-judicial authority. It is hardly enough remembered how different are the circumstances under which a book is written and a judgment pronounced, or how much the weight and value of the latter are due to the discussions at the bar which precede the judgment.

I have revised or re-written or written the following parts of the present volume, viz. :—

- PART I.—The whole.
- „ II.—The whole, except part of Chapter II.
- „ III.—The whole, except Chapter XXV.
- „ V.—Chapter V.
- „ VI.—The whole, except Chapter IX.

The XIth Chapter of Part III. (that on the Statute of Frauds) was originally revised for me by another hand and may retain some traces of a difference of style: and in other parts I received some assistance from my former pupil and friend, the late Mr. H. W. May. By far the greater part of this work of revision and re-writing was done by me before leaving the bar. These parts of the work have been subsequently revised and brought down to date by the labours of Mr. Rawlins.

The revision of the other parts of the volume, namely :—

- PART II.—Part of Chapter II.
„ III.—Chapter XXV.
„ IV.—The whole.
„ V.—The whole, except Chapter V.
„ VI.—Chapter IX.

has been undertaken by Mr. Rawlins alone. He has consulted me on various points which have arisen, especially on the general arrangement of some of the chapters; but the whole merit of this work is his.

To him also is due the entirely new Index, which will, I hope and believe, be found a valuable part of the book.

My thanks are due to Professor Holland, of Oxford, for kind assistance, the nature of which will be learned from the additional note at the end of the volume.

PREFACE

TO THE FIRST EDITION.

THE following pages contain an attempt to inquire into the principles which govern Courts of Equity in the Specific Performance of Contracts. I offer this little book to the members of my profession, with somewhat of hope, because I know the indulgence with which they are wont to accept the results of honest labour spent on professional subjects: but with much more of diffidence, because I am not ignorant of the difficulties of the subject on which I have written, or the shortcomings of my own performance.

The scope and object of my essay will be sufficiently learned from the Table of Contents. It will at once be seen that they are essentially different from those of the admirable works of Lord St. Leonards and Mr. Dart on the Law of Vendors and Purchasers. Those treatises discuss the contract of sale of real estate and all the relations thence arising, so that the doctrine of specific performance is treated of only as one mode in which that contract is enforced: whilst the present work is designed to elucidate the principles of specific performance in general, and the contract of sale only so far as it requires attention as one of the contracts which the Court enforces. If the object of those learned treatises had not been thus distinct from that of the following pages, I should never have thought of committing them to the press.

The connection of the different branches of Law is, like the connection of the sciences, so close as often to embarrass the writer who attempts to treat of one subject by itself. I have found this difficulty continually recurring, as I have been engaged in composing this book, because it is by no means easy to decide how much of the Law on many questions ought to find place in a treatise on the principles and practice of the Courts in specific performance, and how much ought to be referred to a discussion of the particular species of contract to which the point may relate. I have endeavoured on each occasion to solve this question with a view to the practical utility of the following pages, and to what I suppose a lawyer would reasonably expect to find in a treatise bearing the title of this volume.

Several important decisions on the subject of specific performance have appeared during the progress of these pages through the press, which I have found it impracticable to embody in the text: some of these cases have been referred to in the notes, and others only in the Table of Addenda, to which the reader is referred.

My friend Mr. J. P. Green, of the Middle Temple, has obligingly read the proof-sheets of this book: I gratefully acknowledge his kindness in so doing.

Mere non-performance of contract to sign a document	267
Marriage contract	268
Wills	268
(4.) Part performance	268
Principle of the exception	268
Essentials	269
(i.) The acts must refer to a contract	269
They need only be referred to some contract and consistent with that alleged	270
Mr. Austin quoted	271
The acts must not be referable to any other title	271
(ii.) The acts must render non-performance a fraud	272
Principle stated by Lord Cottenham	272
No relief where refusal to perform is no fraud	273
The acts must be done with the knowledge of the person to be charged	273
Where not fraudulent from character of person	273
from the nature of the act	274
from there being alternative remedies	274
(iii.) The contract must be such as can be enforced	275
To what contracts does doctrine of part-performance apply?	275
It does not apply to damages	276
Where want of a seal	276
Where engagement of an honorary character	277
Or incomplete	277

Struggle with common law.

§ 27. The struggle was long continued; "The Spiritual Courts," says Blackstone,¹ "continued to grasp at the same authority as before in suits pro laesione fidei, so late as the fifteenth century." The two versions of the great statute Circumspecte agatis, the one saving to the Courts Christian jurisdiction in such actions, and the other denying it to them, are evidence of the zeal with which the contest was carried on: for the true text must almost certainly have been tampered with and falsified by the one party or the other, in order to support its contention.

§ 28. In Bracton's note-book, so admirably edited by Prof. Maitland, two cases illustrative of the claim of jurisdiction on the ground of fidei laesio are particularly instructive.

The first (No. 50) occurred in the year 1219. A prohibition had issued to restrain Alice Hathemus from drawing Roger the son of Ade into the Court Christian in regard to a lay fee. Alice replied that the matter between her and Roger in the Court Christian was "de fide suâ lesâ et non de laico feodo;" that after her husband's death she had pledged part of her dower to Roger for a term of ten years, and that he had pledged his faith (affidavit) to return the land to her at the end of the ten years: that the term had passed but he had not returned the land, and therefore she sued him "de lesione fidei." But Alice was restrained, and the marginal note runs, "Nota quod prohibicio locum tenet de fidei lesione propter laicum feodum."

§ 29. The second case (No. 1893) occurred in the year 1227. It was an assize to determine whether William the son of Godwin unjustly disseized Richard the son of Maria de Brom of a tenement in Acle.

The jurors found that Alured Rowe demised the land to Richard the son of Maria for a term: meanwhile William the son of Godwin met with Alured and they arranged that Alured should demise the land to William (in feodum) for a certain sum of money, and the day was fixed for the payment of the money and the execution of the charter, and they pledged their faith to this contract ("et ad convencionem istam tenendam hinc inde fuit affidatum"). When the day came William broke his bargain, and thereupon Alured demised the land to Richard. Subsequently, William impleaded Alured in the Court Christian for breach of faith (de fidei lesione). Ultimately, Alured was compelled to execute the deed and to demise the land to William ("ita quod oportuit eundem Aluredum de necessitate facere ei cartam suam et terram illam ei concedere"). Thereupon came William and disseized Richard of the land. Richard (as was just) was held entitled to recover seizin of the land and William was in mercy.

This entry is of the last importance for the present enquiry. It appears to be a clear case of a judgment for specific performance by the Ecclesiastical Court.

Specific performance by a Court Christian.

§ 30. At later dates a few traces of a jurisdiction of the Ecclesiastical Courts in respect of contracts may be found. Chaucer in the Friar's Tale mentions contracts as a subject-matter of the jurisdiction of the archdeacon,

"That boldely did execucioun
In punischying of fornicacioun,
Of wicchecraft, and eek of bauderye,
Of diffamacioun and avoutrye,
Of chirche-reeves and of testamentes,
Of contracts, and of lak of sacramentes."

On such a point the authority of Chaucer appears entitled to much weight. He is said to have been bred to the law: and certain parts of his Tales exhibit an acquaintance even with the forms of law; as, for instance, the Doctor's Tale, where the "pitous bill" presented to Appius by Claudius,¹ forcibly recalls the form of a bill of complaint in the Court of Chancery.

§ 31. Again, in the Registrum Brevium (1634), p. 66 a, is found a form of writ de excommunicato delibendo, where the excommunication appears to have been pronounced "ratione contractus in civitate nostra habiti." Perhaps to the ecclesiastical character and training of the lord of the manor we may refer the fact that two cases of the enforcement of contracts by distraint, in the reign of Edward II., have been discovered in the Bishop of Ely's Manorial Court at Littleport.²

§ 32. There is therefore clear evidence of the activity of the Courts Christian in matters of contract. But there is another point to be noted: they proceeded by admonishing the delinquent party to do the very thing undertaken,—the man who had married a woman and refused her the rights of matrimony, to take her home,—the man who refused to execute the deed according to his promise, to execute the deed. A principle of the Canon law was expressed in the heading of a chapter, "Judex debet studiose agere ut promissa adimpleantur," and in the sentence therein contained, "Studiose agendum est ut ea quae promittuntur opere compleantur."³

Origin of the jurisdiction in Chancery.

§ 33. These materials make it probable that from early times the Courts Christian enforced the specific execution of contracts in which there was an oath or fidei interpositio: that this jurisdiction was narrowed and perhaps almost extinguished by the pressure of the writ of prohibition from the King's Court: and that the ecclesiastical Chancellors found in the Chancery a means of reviving a like jurisdiction, the writ of subpoena taking the place of excommunication.⁴

⁴ See further on the subject of Specific Performance and Laesio fidei an article by the present author in the Law Quarterly Review (No. 19), Vol. 5, p. 235.

§ 34. For in the records of the Court of Chancery there are early traces of the jurisdiction. A case in the reign of Richard II. has been thought to be one of specific performance: cases more distinctly in point occur in the reigns of Henry VI. and Edward IV.

§ 35. In the reigns of Edward VI., Elizabeth, and James I., several cases occur, and the advantages of the jurisdiction in Chancery were perhaps becoming more known. Brooke, in his abridgment,¹ had pointedly shown the superiority of the proceedings by subpœna over an action on the case. "Note," he says, "that by this he will get nothing but damages, but by subpœna the Chancellor can compel him to convey the estate or imprison him ut dicitur."

§ 36. The jurisdiction was thus established, though not without much jealousy on the part of the Common Law Courts, and a strenuous effort to set forward the action on the case as an adequate remedy in the case of contracts.² In an additional note (C), at the end of this volume, will be found a reference to several cases, illustrative of the earlier history of this jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery.

§ 37. The circumstances which seem beyond all others to have conduced to the great development of the doctrine of specific performance in England are the great complication of the titles to English land, and the fact that in regard to land, contract has never been itself the conveyance. In a jurisprudence where contract and transfer are effected by the same instrument, a jurisdiction in specific performance could hardly arise: but where contract is separated from conveyance by all the formalities and delay of an examination into title, and the preparation of a formal deed, it would be a necessity to anything like a civilized system of law.

The jurisdiction in specific performance distinguished

§ 38. Before proceeding further it will be well to distinguish the jurisdiction usually described as that in specific performance from some kindred ones formerly exercised by the Court of Chancery. By specific performance is usually understood that peculiar, and, as it is called, extraordinary jurisdiction, which that Court exercised in respect of executory contracts as contrasted with executed contracts. Some other grounds of equitable relief approximate to specific performance, from which they are nevertheless separable: thus specific performance may be usefully distinguished from

- (a) Specific relief on an executed contract.
- (b) The performance of trusts.
- (c) The delivery of a chattel in specie.
- (d) An equitable charge arising from or accompanied by a contract for a legal charge.
- (e) Constructive trusts.

from that under executed
contracts.

§ 39. (a.) An executory contract is one which is not intended between the parties to be the final instrument regulating their relations: an executed contract is one which is intended to be thus final.¹ The difference may be illustrated by the contrast between an agreement (say on the dissolution of a partnership) to execute a deed containing certain covenants, and the deed itself containing these covenants. The agreement is an executory contract; the deed is an executed contract. An action founded on the agreement would be strictly an action for specific performance: an action founded on the deed would not be so described, and it could have been entertained by the Court of Chancery only on the ground that an injunction or an account was prayed for, or that some independent jurisdiction of the Court was invoked. It could not have been supported on the ground of the peculiar jurisdiction in specific performance.

§ 40. (b.) Actions for specific performance of executory contracts differ from actions for the performance of trusts. For contracts are for the most part contained in legal instruments which give rise to legal rights: and specific performance is therefore only an alternative remedy in lieu of damages. On the contrary, trusts are constituted by instruments which are of equitable force (at least so far as the trust is concerned), in respect of which therefore, before the Judicature Acts, a suit in Equity was the only mode of relief.

from performance of trusts;

§ 41. (c.) The delivery of a chattel in specie may be a mode of specific performance when the right to the chattel flows from a contract. But the Court of Chancery had (as we shall see¹) an independent jurisdiction to decree the delivery up of unique articles, whether the right to them resulted from contract or not.

from delivery of chattel in specie;

§ 42. (d.) A contract for a legal or equitable charge, when the consideration has passed, itself creates an equitable charge independently of the doctrine of specific performance, but may in addition create a right to have a legal charge: though if the contract rested entirely in fieri no performance could be had.²

from an equitable charge;

§ 43. (e.) Again, from actions for specific performance we must distinguish those cases in which, by reason of fraud or the breach of some fiduciary relationship, a constructive trust arises. Cases sometimes of a mixed nature have arisen: as, for instance, when by a contract to give up part of an estate if purchased, A. persuaded B. not to compete with him as a purchaser. On A.'s refusal to abide by his contract, B. might have sued him, alleging at once the contract and the breach of A.'s duty as agent.¹

We shall hereafter see² that the peculiar doctrines of the Court as to the specific performance of executory contracts do not necessarily apply to the other forms in which the Court grants specific relief.

§ 44. There is an observation often made with regard to the jurisdiction in specific performance which remains to be noticed. It is said to be in the discretion of the Court. The meaning of this proposition is not that the Court may arbitrarily or capriciously perform one contract and refuse to perform another, but that the Court has regard to the conduct of the plaintiff and to circumstances outside the contract itself, and that the mere fact of the existence of a valid contract is not conclusive in the plaintiff's favour.³ "If the defendant," said Plumer V.C., "can show any circumstances dehors, independent of the writing, making it inequitable to interpose for the purpose of a specific performance, a Court of Equity, having satisfactory information upon that subject, will not interpose."⁴

§ 45. And the contract itself may give rise to the discretion. A property was sold as "leasehold business premises," and the purchaser was by condition precluded from objecting to anything in the lease: the lease, when produced, showed fetters on the use of the property, which falsified the description of the property as business premises: the Court declined in its discretion to enforce performance.⁵

§ 46. But of the circumstances calling for the exercise of this discretion, the Court judges by settled and fixed rules ; hence the discretion is said to be not arbitrary or capricious, but judicial :¹ hence, also, if the contract has been entered into by a competent party, and is unobjectionable in its nature and circumstances, specific performance is as much a matter of course, and therefore of right, as are damages.² The mere hardship of the results will not affect the discretion of the Court.³

fully discusses the nature of the discretion in specific performance.

CHAPTER II.

OF THE EXTENT OF THE JURISDICTION.

PART I.
Ch. ii.

Not all kinds of contracts
performed.

§ 47. It has already been in substance observed that if a contract be made and one party to it make default in performance, there appears to result to the other party a right at his election either to insist on the actual performance of the contract, or to obtain satisfaction for the non-performance of it.¹ It may be suggested that from this it follows that a perfect system of jurisprudence ought to enforce the actual performance of contracts of every kind and class, except only when there are circumstances which render such enforcement unnecessary or inexpedient, and that it ought to be assumed that every contract is specifically enforceable until the contrary be shown. But so broad a proposition has never, it is believed, been asserted by any of the Judges of the Court of Chancery, or their successors in the High Court of Justice, though, if prophecy were the function of a law writer, it might be suggested that they will more and more approximate to such a rule.

Judges have sometimes dwelt upon those negative circumstances which render specific performance unnecessary or inexpedient: sometimes on those affirmative circumstances which render such performance necessary and expedient.

The extent and limits of the jurisdiction.

§ 48. The following propositions may help to explain the extent to which the jurisdiction has hitherto gone, assuming in each proposition (unless otherwise stated or implied) the existence of a contract binding in Equity. The Court will interfere in specific performance—

Ch. ii.

- (i.) Where there is no Common Law remedy.
- (ii.) Where the Common Law remedy exists, but is not adequate.

On the contrary, the Court will not interfere in specific performance—

- (iii.) Where the Common Law remedy exists and is adequate.
- (iv.) Where the contract is such as the Court cannot perform.
- (v.) Where the performance of the contract would prove useless.
- (vi.) Where the Court would be unable to enforce its own judgment.
- (vii.) Where the enforced performance of the contract would be worse than its non-performance.
- (viii.) Where the contract is voluntary.
- (ix.) Where the plaintiff has elected to proceed in some other manner than for specific performance.
- (x.) Where the jurisdiction has been taken away by statute.

After the foregoing propositions have been discussed it will be shown—

- (xi.) That the jurisdiction is against the defendant personally.

Lastly will be considered—

- (xii.) Certain cases of quasi-contract in which the Court has jurisdiction.

i. Where there is no Common Law Remedy.

§ 49. In many cases though a contract was in conscience obligatory upon both the parties to it, yet

ference

Ch. ii.

the Common Law, from the strictness of its forms, afforded no remedy to the party injured by the other's non-performance. The defect of justice which hence arose was avoided by the jurisdiction of Equity, which in such cases has compelled the specific execution of the contract, if in other respects fit for the intervention of the Court.

Contracts differently regarded at Common Law and in Equity.

§ 50. In Equity, differing in this respect from the Common Law, a distinction was made between those terms which are of the essence of the contract and those terms which are not thus essential, and a breach of which it is inequitable for either party to set up against the other as a reason for refusing to execute the contract between them. In these cases the doctrine of Common Law was forfeiture; the doctrine of Equity is compensation. "Lord Thurlow," to quote the language of his successor Lord Eldon, "used to refer this doctrine of specific performance to this:—that it is scarcely possible that there may not be some small mistake or inaccuracy; as, that a leasehold interest represented to be for twenty-one years, may be for twenty years and nine months; some of those little circumstances that would defeat an action at Law, and yet lie so clearly in compensation that they ought not to prevent the execution of the contract."¹ On this ground the jurisdiction rests in all cases where specific performance is decreed with compensation by the plaintiff.

Common Law remedy lost by default of plaintiff.

§ 51. The fact that the Common Law remedy has been lost by the default of the very party seeking the specific performance of a contract will not exclude the jurisdiction, if it be notwithstanding conscientious that the contract should be performed, as in cases where the plaintiff has performed his part substantially, but not with such exactitude as to be able to plead such performance as the Common Law Courts required.¹

¹ In Mortlock v. Buller, 10 Ves. 305-6. See also Stewart v. Alliston, 1 Mer. 26, 32.

PART I.
Ch. ii.

§ 52. But besides these cases, there are many others in which the Court interferes, because there is no Common Law remedy by reason of something in the subject-matter of the contract,² or the parties to it, or the form in which it is concluded.

Common Law unavailable from something in the contract.

§ 53. Thus the Court will give relief in respect of a contract to assign a chose in action,³ or of a contract concerning the hope of succession of an heir,⁴ although no damages could have been recovered at Common Law for contracts dealing with these subject-matters, and it will in a proper case specifically enforce a right of pre-emption, and restrain by injunction the violation of such a right, and will specifically enforce a compromise.⁵ In one case Plumer M.R. intimated the opinion that where a promissory note had been handed over for valuable consideration unindorsed, a Court of Equity would at the suit of the holder compel the transferor, or his personal representative, to indorse it in order to substantiate the right of the transferee.⁶ A contract between joint tenants of a copyhold estate to divide it between them has been specifically enforced.⁷

Or from the nature of the contract.

§ 54. Again, the Court will specifically enforce a contract to execute a mortgage, and that even with an immediate power of sale where the money has been actually advanced either before or at the time of the contract;¹ though it will not so enforce a mere agreement to lend, advance or pay money² (though the loan be one to be secured by mortgage), while it rests entirely unperformed either by the intended lender³ or by the intended borrower.⁴ “The Statute of Frauds does not apply to such a case. Therefore if the Court has jurisdiction in such a case, any conversation may be made the subject of a suit for specific performance: thus if two friends are walking together and one says ‘Will you lend me £100 at £5 per cent. for a year on good security?’ and the other says ‘I will,’ that conversation might be made the subject of a suit for specific performance in this Court if on the next day one friend should say ‘I do not want the money,’ or the other should say ‘I will not lend it.’ Nothing would be more difficult and more dangerous than the task which this Court would have to perform if it were to investigate cases of that description.”⁵ holds.

§ 55. In one case there was a contract by B. to advance to C. £3,000 on the security of some leasehold houses for five years. B. advanced £600 on deposit of the lease of one of the houses. The contract was (in the opinion of the Court) that B. should not be entitled to call for the lessor’s title. Nevertheless he did call for it, and on its being refused filed a bill for specific performance of the contract or for the sale of the property to repay him the £600 and interest. The Court considered that the plaintiff was in the wrong, but, the defendant submitting to perform the § 58. The Court of Chancery has also interfered specifically to execute a contract evidenced by a bond given to a wife by her husband, or to a husband by his wife,⁴ before marriage, though the bond was suspended at Common Law by the intermarriage.

§ 59. The same principle equally applies to give the Court jurisdiction where, though the contract is in its nature such that a breach of it can be satisfied by damages, yet from some particular circumstances this remedy is not open to the aggrieved party: therefore where a contract for the purchase of timber-trees was comprised in a memorandum which appeared not to be the final contract, but was to be made complete by subsequent articles, so that it was doubtful whether the contract, as it then stood, would not have been considered at Law as incomplete, and so the plaintiff have been debarred of any remedy there, Lord Hardwicke held that the contract was one which the Court of Chancery could specifically perform.¹ In another case a contract to purchase a debt was enforced against the purchaser, on the ground that the debt had not been so assigned to him as to enable him successfully to sue at Law;² and in the case of a contract for the purchase of Government stock, the fact that the plaintiff was not the original holder of the scrip, but merely the bearer, which rendered it doubtful whether he could maintain an action at Law upon the contract, was one ground on which the Court of Chancery was held to have jurisdiction.³

Former practice
of the Court of Chancery.

§ 60. It is said that before the time of Lord Somers the practice of the Court of Chancery was to send the parties to Law, and to entertain the suit only in case of the plaintiff's there recovering damages,⁴ a practice which, of course, involved the proposition that specific performance could not be granted except in cases where damages could be recovered at Law. That limitation of the jurisdiction has, however, been long overruled—notably in the case of Dr. Bettesworth v. The Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's,⁵ decided by Lord King in 1726, with the assistance of Raymond C.J. and Price J. A lease had been granted by the defendants previously to the disabling statute of 13 Eliz., with a covenant to renew for ninety-nine years, and the plaintiff sought a renewal for the term allowed by the statute, which the Lord Chancellor refused, on the ground that no action could have been maintained on the covenant after the passing of the statute. “I take this to be a certain clear rule of Equity,” said Raymond C.J.,⁶ “that a specific performance shall never be compelled for the not doing of which the Law would not give damages. The covenant to oblige them to make a lease for ninety-nine years is gone, and damages cannot be recovered for part of a covenant, and I, therefore, am of opinion Equity cannot interfere." This decision, which was opposed by the opinion of Jekyll M.R., was reversed in the House of Lords; and it is abundantly evident, from the cases already cited, that the jurisdiction at present exercised is not restrained within these limits, and that there are many cases in which specific performance is granted where no action for damages could be maintained.¹ ii. Where there is no adequate Common Law remedy.

iii. Where there is an adequate Common Law remedy.

§ 61. The propositions that the Court will interfere in specific performance where the Common Law remedy exists but is not adequate, and that the Court will not interfere where the Common Law remedy exists and is adequate, being in the nature of converse propositions will be conveniently considered together.

§ 62. The only remedy at Common Law for the non-performance of a contract was in damages, that is to say, in the payment of a sum of money by the party who had broken the contract to the party injured by that breach. If money were in all cases a perfect measure of the injury done by this breach, it is evident that an exact equivalent for the wrong might be made, and that the justice done would be complete. But money is an exact equivalent only when by money the loss sustained by the breach of contract can be fully made good. Now in a vast variety of cases this is not so; for though one sovereign or one shilling is to all intents and purposes as good as any other sovereign or shilling, yet one landed estate, though of precisely the same market value as another, may be vastly different in every other circumstance that makes it an object of desire: so that it evidently follows that there would be a failure of justice, unless some other jurisdiction supplemented that of Common Law, by compelling the defaulting party to do that which in conscience he is bound to do, namely, actually and specifically to perform his contract. The Common Law treats as universal a proposition which is for the most part, but not universally, true, namely, that money is a measure of every loss.¹ The defect of justice which arose from this universality of the Common Law principle was met and remedied in certain cases by the jurisdiction of Courts of Equity to compel specific performance.

Common Law remedy partial.

§ 63. The mere existence of a Common Law remedy, and even the existence of a perfect Common Law relation, will not necessarily exclude specific performance. Thus, in one case it was held that although an agreement may possibly amount at Law to a present demise or assignment, yet if the document showed the intention that a further instrument should be executed, specific performance might be decreed.²

Common Law remedy less beneficial.

§ 64. Even when money is alone in question, the Common Law remedy is in some instances less beneficial than that afforded by Courts of Equity, and where this is so, a ground is laid for specific performance if otherwise a proper remedy. So where A. gave a note to B., and C. agreed with B. for the relinquishment of his (B.'s) claim against A. on the payment of certain sums, for which the notes were, in the contemplation of Equity, to stand only as a security, it was held that the Court of Chancery would specifically perform the contract, though the relations between the parties might have been worked out by actions at Law.¹

§ 65. Sir John Leach M.R. (then V.C.) seems to have considered that the fact that the remedy in damages given at Common Law depended for its beneficial effect upon the personal responsibility of the defendant, gave the other party to the contract a right to sue in Equity for its actual performance.² It is evident that this principle applies to all damages, and, if it were admitted, would give the Court jurisdiction by way of specific performance in all cases of contract, whether for the sale of chattels or of any other nature, which certainly is not the law of the Court.

Doctrine of Leach
V.C.

In another case the same learned Judge appears to have held that the circumstance that damages at Law would not accurately represent the value of the contract to either party was a ground for granting specific performance. The contract in that case was for the sale of debts proved under two commissions of bankruptcy; and Leach V.C. granted specific performance, considering that to compel the plaintiff to accept damages would be to compel him to sell those dividends which were of unascertained value at a conjectural price.³ The learned Judge just named seems to have shown a tendency to extend the jurisdiction in specific performance somewhat more liberally than most other Judges:⁴ and the mere want of exactitude in the measure of damages at Common Law has not always been held a sufficient ground for the equitable jurisdiction.

§ 66. The ground of this jurisdiction having been the inadequacy of the remedy at Common Law, it followed that where that remedy was adequate, Chancery did not interfere to compel specific performance. It is on this ground that the Court has generally refused specific performance in respect of Government stock or chattels, as will be hereafter seen, and refuses it in all cases where the contract is satisfied by a mere payment of money.¹

Instances.

§ 67. The principle has been recognized in several other cases. It was one of the grounds on which Knight Bruce and Lord Cranworth L.JJ. acted in dismissing the bill in *Lord James Stuart v. London and North-Western Railway Co.*² so far as regarded specific performance, and only putting the defendants on terms to make certain admissions in any action at Law to be brought by the plaintiff against them,—their Lordships considering that, the railway having been abandoned and complete relief being in their opinion obtainable at Law, the case was not one for specific performance. It was also one of the reasons alleged by Lord Cranworth L.J. for dismissing the bill in Webb v. Direct London and Portsmouth Railway Co.,³ he considering that under the circumstances the vendor could obtain complete relief at Law. The authority of these decisions was subsequently questioned by Lord St. Leonards,⁴ but only as to the applicability of the principle to the circumstances, and not as to the validity of the principle itself.

Contract

tenancy.

§ 68. In one case specific performance was sought of a contract for a tenancy from year to year, the contract specifying that the tenant was in all respects to abide by the terms entered into by a previous tenant, and that the tenant should pay for a contract to be drawn up; it was contended that the Court would therefore interfere for the purpose of settling the proper terms of the contract. But the Court thought the remedy at Law was adequate, and that the full terms of the contract might be shown there, and therefore refused to decree performance.¹

§ 69. On this ground also, as well as that of the incapacity of the Court to execute the works, the Court of Chancery refused specifically to perform a contract to make a branch railway, although the contract for the execution of it had been entered into during the pendency of the Bill before Parliament, and when several of the directors had thoughts of withdrawing the Bill, and would have in fact done so (as the bill of complaint alleged), but for the contract in question.²

§ 70. And where a bill sought the specific performance of a contract which would have been effected by a mere account of profits and a payment of the amount found due, and there was no obstacle to the recovery of the amount at Law, the Court dismissed the suit.³

§ 71. In analogy with this principle, in a case in which the plaintiffs sought the specific performance of a contract to grant a way-leave for a railway for a term of sixty years, and between the filing of the bill and the hearing the plaintiffs had obtained statutory powers to take the land in fee, Stuart V.C. considered this to be a circumstance strongly influencing the discretion of the Court against specific performance.¹

§ 72. It may appear at first sight that inasmuch as money in exchange for the estate is what the vendor of land is entitled to, he has a complete remedy in an action for damages, and therefore cannot sustain an action for the specific performance of the contract. But on further consideration it will be apparent that damages will not place the vendor in the same situation as if the contract had been performed; for then he would have got rid of the land and of all the burdens and liabilities attaching to it, and would have the purchase-money in his pocket; whereas, after an action for damages, he still has the land and, in addition, damages,—representing, in the opinion of a jury, the difference between the stipulated price and the price which it would probably fetch, if re-sold, together with incidental expenses and any special damage which he may have suffered.² The doctrine of Equity with respect to the conversion of the land into money, and of the money into land upon the execution of the contract,³ and the lien which the vendor has on the estate for the purchase-money, and his right to enforce this by the aid of the Court, are additional reasons for extending the remedy to both parties. Accordingly, it is well established that the remedy is mutual, and that the vendor may bring his action in all cases where the purchaser could sue for specific performance of the contract, and this independently of any question on the Statute of Frauds.⁴

Government

§ 74. It appears that in one instance Lord Hardwicke did grant specific performance of such a contract:¹ but in the earlier case of Cuddee (or Cud) v. *Rutter*² Lord Macclesfield, overruling a decision at the Rolls, refused to perform a contract to transfer South Sea Stock, though by the decree he undertook to arrange the settlement between the parties. His Lordship assigned three reasons for this decision: first, the nature of the subject-matter of the contract; secondly, the circumstance that the defendant was not possessed of the stock at the time of the contract; and thirdly, that the liability to sudden rise and fall in stock made the day a most material part of the contract, and therefore rendered it an improper one for the Court to carry into execution. This principle was acted on by Gilbert C.B.³ and stated to be the settled doctrine of the Court by Lord Eldon.⁴

§ 75. In a case before Leach V.C., a bill for the specific performance of a contract to sell Neapolitan Stock was supported; but this was partly on the ground of its praying the delivery of the certificates which would constitute the plaintiff the proprietor of a certain quantity of the stock, and partly because, the plaintiff not being the original scrip-holder, but merely the bearer, it was doubtful whether he would be able to maintain his action at Law.⁵ In another case the same Judge overruled a demurrer to a bill by the vendor of a life-annuity payable out of dividends of stock, on the ground that the purchaser could clearly maintain such a bill, and that the remedy must be mutual.¹ But it seems that the Court would not enforce specific performance of a contract to sell a life-interest in the public funds.²

in companies.

§ 76. With regard to shares in companies the same principle does not apply. "In my opinion," said Shadwell V.C.,³ "there is not any sort of analogy between a quantity of £3 per cents. or any other stock of that description (which is always to be had by any person who chooses to apply for it in the market), and a certain number of railway shares of a particular description, which railway shares are limited in number, and which, as has been observed, are not always to be had in the market;" and accordingly specific performance was enforced of a contract to sell a certain number of railway shares, the shares not being particularized. In a subsequent case Lord Chelmsford stated that there was no doubt that a contract for the sale of railway shares is capable of being enforced:⁴ and in a subsequent chapter⁵ many recent cases will be referred to which have arisen in respect of contracts for the sale of shares. It may have been on this principle that Lord King disallowed a demurrer to a bill for the transfer of York Building Stock;⁶ but a different view seems to have been previously entertained by Lord Macclesfield, inasmuch as he dismissed a bill for the transfer of £1000 of the same stock.⁷

In like manner the company may sue a person who has contracted with the company to take shares from it.³ Many difficult questions have arisen as to the nature and effect of contracts to take shares, which will be considered separately in a later chapter.⁴

§ 78. The Court for the most part refuses to interfere in respect of chattels, both because damages are a sufficient remedy, and because the price of such articles, especially of merchandise, varies so as often to render the specific execution of contracts for their sale and delivery an act of injustice, entailing perhaps ruin on one side, when upon an action that party might not have paid perhaps above a shilling damages.⁵ As these principles however do not apply to all cases of chattels, exceptions arise which we shall now consider.

§ 79. When the chattel in question is unique, when there is, over and above the market value, that which has been called the pretium affectionis, the Court, whether the plaintiff's right has arisen from contract or not, has interfered and not left him to his Common Law remedy. argued, no objection seems to have been taken to the jurisdiction.

PART I.
Ch. ii.

§ 82. There is a dictum of Lord Westbury in the House of Lords which puts the jurisdiction as regards chattels, as if extending to every case where the contract relates to specific property. "A contract for the sale of goods," said his Lordship,¹ "as, for example, of 500 chests of tea, is not a contract which would be specifically performed, because it does not relate to any chests of tea in particular: but a contract to sell 500 chests of the particular kind of tea which is now in my warehouse in Gloucester is a contract relating to specific property, and which would be specifically performed. The buyer may maintain a suit in Equity for the delivery of a specific chattel when it is the subject of a contract, and for an injunction (if necessary) to restrain the seller from delivering it to any other person." It may be doubted whether this dictum does not express a more complete system of jurisprudence than that which we possess, and whether the records of the Court of Chancery contained many bills for the specific performance of contracts relating to specific chattels of a mercantile value like tea.²

Dictum of Lord Westbury.

§ 83. It does not appear to follow from the authorities referred to or from principle, that the vendor of a chattel can maintain an action for specific performance in all cases where a purchaser of the same chattel could do so.

§ 84. It also appears that if the chattel be of a peculiar value, but by contract between the parties a price has been put upon the chattel, that circumstance has been treated as precluding the jurisdiction; for it is an admission that by a money payment full relief can be had.¹

Chattels
not unique but of
importance.

§ 85. Hitherto unique chattels have been spoken of: but it appears that such jurisdiction as the Court exercises in the case of unique chattels it may also exercise in the case of chattels which, though not unique, possess a special and peculiar value to the plaintiff. Thus in *North v. The Great Northern Railway Co.*² the Court upheld its jurisdiction to interfere to prevent the sale of certain waggons belonging to the plaintiff, which had been used by the plaintiff in his business of a colliery owner, and which the defendants asserted that they had a right to detain and sell. "Where specific things," said Stuart V.C.,³ "necessary for conducting a particular business are in the possession of persons who claim a lien upon them, and threaten an immediate sale, this Court has undoubted jurisdiction to interfere by injunction and prevent irreparable injury to the debtor, by giving him an opportunity of redeeming assets."

particular article is essential or only convenient.

§ 86. So, too, there is the high authority of Lord Hardwicke for suggesting that specific performance might be maintained by a shipbuilder if he were to contract with a landowner for the supply of timber from an adjoining estate, the shipbuilder being under contract to complete a ship by a given time, for which the supply of such timber by the defendant was essential. But this seems open to doubt: and certainly the doctrine will not be extended to mere cases of convenience, as the supply of coal from an adjoining colliery, when plenty of other coal can be procured in the neighbourhood.⁴

§ 87. Cases might probably arise in which the Court would interfere in respect of chattels connected with the enjoyment of an estate, where but for such connection it would not exercise jurisdiction. In one case Lord Eldon made an order specifically to restore to a tenant the stock on a farm, which had been seized by the landlord under a distress and bill of sale; his Lordship holding that, under the circumstances of that case, there was an entire contract by which the landlord agreed to let the tenant have both the estate and the chattels, the enjoyment of the chattels being requisite for the enjoyment of the estate.¹

PART I.
Ch. ii.

Chattels connected with enjoyment of estate.

§ 88. This appears to have been one ground on which the Court of Chancery anciently enforced contracts to build in certain cases; as where the father entered into articles with a builder, and died before the execution of the contract, the heir was allowed to sue the personal representative of his father and the builder, the contract savouring of the realty.² So, in another case, a contract to build was specifically enforced against a tenant who, having undertaken to rebuild the farm-house, had done so on his own soil instead of his landlord's.³ And we shall hereafter⁴ see that contracts by railway companies for the execution of works on the land of the plaintiff stand on a different footing from ordinary building contracts.

to build.

§ 89. Lord Hardwicke seems to have entertained the view that where the contract was for the delivery of chattels by instalments and for payment in a like method, the Court would entertain jurisdiction.

were specifically enforced.¹ The case appears to have been, as already stated, approved by his Lordship, was doubted by Lord Hatherley (when V.C.), and remarked on the absence of any case for the sale of mere goods being supported on the ground of their being to be delivered by instalments.² Mr. Austin, too, has expressed his inability to understand on what principle the case proceeded,³ and a like inability here confessed.

Incapacity of Court to

contract.

§ 90. Where the contract is from its nature such that the Court cannot enforce its performance,⁴ it is necessarily no subject of its jurisdiction in that respect.⁵

Instances.

§ 91. On this principle the Court will not prohibit the making of a secret medicine; for if it be secret then the Court cannot tell whether it has been infringed or no;⁶ nor, for the same reason, will it direct the specific performance of covenants in a farm lease, for “how,” said Lord Northington, “can the Master judge of repairs in husbandry?”⁷ Nor will it enforce against a life assurance society a contract to reduce a premium if satisfied with the removal of the cause for charging an extra premium, for it is the society and not the Court which is to be satisfied;⁸ nor will it order the performance of continuous acts.¹ And the fact that the parties cannot be put in the condition for which they stipulated when the contract was entered into obviously disables the Court from adjudging specific performance.²

PART I.
Ch. ii.

§ 92. And so too the Court will not interfere to enforce a contract by means of injunction, where the acts complained of as breaches are frequent, and the Court could not ascertain whether there has in each case been a breach without an action; as in the case of a covenant not to sell water from a certain well to the plaintiff's injury.³

frequent.

§ 93. The incapacity of the Court to execute the contract limits its jurisdiction in cases relating to the sale of the goodwill of a business. For where the contract has respect to a goodwill alone, unconnected with business premises, the Court refuses specific performance by reason of the uncertainty of the subject matter, and the consequent incapacity of the Court to give specific directions as to what is to be done to transfer it.⁴ But where the goodwill is entirely or mainly annexed to the premises, and the contract is for the sale of the premises and goodwill, the contract may be enforced.⁵ For in that case the goodwill is merely the advantage attached to the possession of the house or other place of business,⁶—"the probability," to use the words of Lord Eldon,⁷ "that the old cus-

But it seems to be now established, not only that such transactions are legally valid,² but that they may be specifically executed, by injunction or otherwise, at the Court.⁴

v. Where the performance of the contract would be a

Revocable
contracts.

§ 94. The Court will not enforce a contract which is in its nature revocable by the defendant, for its interference in such a case would be inasmuch as what it had done might be in whole or in part undone by one of the parties.

Thus where the Registrar of a Consistory Court agreed to grant a deputation of his office, it was held that such a deputation was in its nature revocable and therefore could not be enforced by the Court.

§ 95. It is on the same principle that the Court generally refuses to interfere in cases of contracts to enter into partnership which do not specify the duration of the partnership—that relation, unless otherwise provided, being dissoluble at the will of either party.¹ There is indeed some authority to the contrary of this proposition, consisting of a dictum of Lord Hardwicke's² in general terms, and two or three cases³ in which specific performance of contracts for partnership seems to have been enforced, but with regard to which it does not appear whether the partnerships thus constituted were for a term or not; and it is indeed said that Lord Eldon was not quite satisfied with his decision in the case quoted as establishing the principle.⁴

§ 96. The doctrine, however, appears to be generally accepted as that of the Court. Thus in a case before Lord Romilly M.R. the principle was acted on: the defendant entered into a contract with the plaintiff company to take a certain number of shares and to execute the deed of settlement when required; and of this contract the Court refused specific performance, because the defendant might, by the rules of the company, have ceased again to be a partner within fourteen days after becoming such.⁵

may immediately take advantage of them to deprive the other of all benefit under the instrument; as, for instance, a contract for a lease which is to contain a proviso for re-entry on breach of a covenant, which the plaintiff has already broken.¹

vi. Where the Court would be unable to enforce its judgment.

Contracts
to build cute works.

§ 98. In some old cases, the Court of Chancery entertained suits in respect of building contracts: and what has been considered one of the earliest traces of the jurisdiction in specific performance is a dictum of Genney J. in the 8 Edward IV. that a promise to build a house would be specifically enforced.² Lord Hardwicke also maintained this view of the jurisdiction of the Court.³ But it is now clearly settled that subject to certain exceptions, the Court will not specifically enforce contracts to build or repair,⁴ because specific performance is “decreed only where the party wants the thing in specie, and cannot have it any other way,”⁵ and because such contracts are the most part so uncertain that the Court would be unable to enforce its own judgment.⁶

§ 100. In the case of *Brace v. Wehnert*⁵ decided by Lord Romilly M.R. in March, 1858, the contract was that A. should grant a lease to B. as soon as B. should have built a house of the value of £1400 according to a plan to be submitted to and approved by A., and B. agreed to build and take the lease: no plan had been approved: a bill filed by A. against B. was dismissed with costs. In like manner a contract by a landlord to execute repairs upon a farm was not enforced.⁶

Other instances.

§ 101. But, since Lord Cairns' Act (21 & 22 Vict. c. 27), it has been held that where the contract is for the building of a house and also for the grant and acceptance of a lease, the Court can grant specific performance of the contract to accept the lease and give damages for the non-building of the house.⁷

Court will interfere. Lord Rosslyn, in a judgment which appears never to have been overruled, maintained that where a contract for building is in its nature defined, the Court might without much difficulty entertain a suit for its performance.¹ Mr. Justice Story argues in support of this view,² and in *Cubitt v. Smith*³ Stuart V.C. acted upon it. It may also be added that in Scotland many contracts to build are specifically performed, in respect of which the Court would decline jurisdiction in England, the Scotch Courts appointing some properly qualified person, under whose superintendence the work is directed to be executed.⁴

§ 103. But whether the Court will, or will not, interfere to enforce all such contracts when definite, it appears to be settled that it will assume jurisdiction where we have the following three circumstances:— first, that the work to be done is defined; secondly, that the plaintiff has a material interest in its execution, which cannot adequately be compensated for by damages, and thirdly, that the defendants have by the contract obtained from the plaintiff possession of the land on which the work is to be done. Thus the Court has in numerous cases⁵ enforced on railway companies contracts to make and maintain works for the convenience of the lands of the plaintiff. It has done this in cases in which the terms of the contract have been general and difficult to execute.

vii. Where the enforced performance of the contract would be worse than its non-performance.

§ 110. The relation established by the contract of hiring and service⁴ is of so personal and confidential a character that it is evident that such contracts cannot be specifically enforced by the Court against an unwilling party with any hope of ultimate and real success; and accordingly the Court now refuses to entertain jurisdiction in regard to them.⁵

§ 111. In former times this seems to have been otherwise. In a case decided by Lord Cowper and the House of Lords, there was a contract by which a at p. 487, the opinion appears to have been intimated by Jessel M.R. that the fact of there being no property, the right to which is taken away from the person complaining, lies at the root of the Court's non-interference in respect of contracts strictly personal in their nature. See also De Francesco v. Barnum, 45 Ch. D. 430.

skilled person had bound himself to serve during his life as manager and overseer to a company engaged in the manufacture of brass, and the company had agreed to pay him a certain salary and 3s. 6d. for every hundred-weight of brass wire made by him or any other person for them during his life; on a bill by the manager, Lord Cowper decreed the payments according to the articles for past services, and specific performance of them for the future, by the plaintiff again repairing to the works and acting according to the articles, if the defendants should require the same. The appeal from this decree to the House of Lords was by the plaintiff on a point of the construction of the contract as to the 3s. 6d. per cwt., which resulted in a modification of the decree according to his contention.¹ And in another case Lord Hardwicke specifically enforced against the plaintiffs as part of the things to be done by them under the contract, a stipulation by the East India Company to employ a man as a packer.²

§ 112. But the difficulty of enforcing such contracts in specie is now admitted by the Court. It is not for the interests of society that persons who are not desirous of maintaining continuous personal relations with one another should be compelled so to do.³ In a case where the plaintiffs had contracted for a specified sum to work the line of a railway company and to keep the engines and rolling stock in repair, the Court, considering this to be a contract for services, refused to enforce it.⁴ “We are asked," said Knight Bruce L.J.,¹ "to compel one person to employ against his will another as his confidential servant, for duties with respect to the due performance of which the utmost confidence is required. Let him be one of the best and most competent persons that ever lived, still, if the two do not agree, and good people do not always agree, enormous mischief may be done."

§ 113. The proposal to apply the principles of specific performance to contracts of service which would have affected the Ryots of Bengal led to a vigorous protest from Lord Lawrence, whose observations on the point may be read with profit.²

Instances.

§ 114. In one case a grant having relation to an office of a personal and confidential character, was held to be incapable of being specifically enforced;³ in another instance, where an indenture was held to constitute the relation of master and servant, and not of partner, Lord Truro dissolved an injunction which had been previously granted, restraining the defendant from excluding the plaintiff from the management of the business;⁴ and in another case, where a contract by the plaintiff to employ the defendant as manager of a business formed part of a contract by which the defendant agreed to grant to the plaintiff a lease of a wharf, specific performance was refused on the ground of want of mutuality.⁵

Contracts
of agency.

§ 115. In like manner the Court cannot enforce contracts of agency: as has been illustrated in the cases of contracts to employ a shipping-broker⁶ and

viii. Where the contract is voluntary.

§ 116. The Court will never lend its assistance to enforce the specific execution of contracts which are voluntary, or where no consideration emanates from the party seeking performance,³ even though they may have the legal consideration of a seal: and this principle applies, whether the contract insisted on be in the form of an executory agreement, a covenant, or a settlement.⁴ The peculiar doctrines of the Court as to the consideration which permeates⁵ contracts in relation to marriage settlements must be borne in mind in relation to the foregoing statement.

ix. Where the plaintiff has elected to proceed in some other manner than for specific performance.

Where plaintiff proceeded at Law.

§ 118. Where a plaintiff proceeded at Common Law and recovered damages for breach of the contract, he could not afterwards sue in Equity for its specific performance.¹ But of course it was not every proceeding at Common Law under a contract which barred its specific performance in Equity.² This result was effected only where the legal and equitable relief were in respect of the same thing.

Opinion of Knight
Bruce L.J.

§ 119. In Swinfen v. Swinfen,³ Knight Bruce L.J. seemed to think that the fact of applying to the Court of Common Pleas for an attachment to enforce a contract to compromise would stand in the way of the applicant afterwards suing in Chancery for performance of the same contract.

Opinion of Lord Cran-worth.

And in *Blackett v. Bates*⁴ Lord Cranworth intimated the opinion that a party to an award could not, after unsuccessfully taking proceedings to set it aside, insist on having it specifically performed. But in a case already referred to, a negotiation for the payment of a money compensation which went off was held not to be an election which precluded the relief in specific performance.⁵

ings under

Clauses
Act.

§ 120. In a case where a railway company was entitled to enforce a contract as to the sale of lands entered into by the defendant with the promoters of the company, the company first took proceedings under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act for a compulsory purchase, then took compulsory possession of the land by virtue of a bond, and lastly filed their

§ 121. It is conceived that the principle embodied in the case last cited will continue to be observed by the Supreme Court.² But so far as the form of the proceedings is concerned, the right of claiming alternative³ relief, and the wide powers of amendment⁴ exerciseable under the new practice, will in all proper cases enable a plaintiff to obtain relief by way of specific performance, provided that the facts proved and the rest of his claim as presented or insisted on at the trial are not inconsistent with such relief.⁵

x. Where the jurisdiction has been taken away by statute.

§ 122. By sect. 47 of the Fines and Recoveries Abolition Act (3 & 4 W. IV. c. 74), any jurisdiction which the Courts of Equity might otherwise have had to treat a disentailing assurance under the statute as a contract of which specific performance might be granted, is taken away.⁶ But this does not affect the jurisdiction which the Courts possessed of enforcing against the actual contracting tenant in tail a contract to execute a disentailing assurance.⁷

xi. The jurisdiction is against the defendant personally.

Equity
acts against the person.

§ 123. The jurisdiction in specific performance is against the person of the defendant on the equity arising from the contract. This principle is fertile in results.

Where defendant not subject to the jurisdiction.

§ 124. One result is that where the defendant is a person over whom the tribunals of this country have no jurisdiction, there can be no relief. Hence no specific performance can be awarded against a foreign government of a contract entered into by such government with a private person.¹

Where Court had originally no jurisdiction.

§ 125. Another result of this principle is that it constitutes no objection to specific performance, that the subject-matter with which the contract deals was not originally within the jurisdiction of the Court, as the contract itself may give the Court jurisdiction in specific performance, as well as in damages. The original jurisdiction in respect of the boundaries of our plantations in North America resided in the King in Council; but a contract respecting them having been entered into between adjoining proprietors was held by Lord Hardwicke to give the Court jurisdiction;² and on the same principle, although the Court has no jurisdiction in matrimonial causes, yet, where there has been a contract or covenant, it may interfere to enforce the execution of a proper separation deed, or to restrain the breach of a covenant contained in it.³

contracts.

§ 126. This introduces to our consideration the subject of foreign contracts.

² Penn v. Lord Baltimore, 1 Ves. Sen. 444. Consider Norris v. Chambres, 3 De G. F. & J. 583 (affirming S. C. 29 Beav. 246).

³ Wilson v. Wilson, 1 H. L. C. 538; S. C. 14 Sim. 405; 5 H. L. C. 40. Cahill v. Cahill, 8 App. Cas. 420, contains some of the latest law on this subject.

The general principle which regulates the place for the enforcement of contracts is, it is conceived, expressed in the maxim "actio sequitur forum rei."¹ It follows from this that a contract made abroad may be enforced against a defendant within the jurisdiction of this country, and as the remedies for breach of a contract are clearly governed by the lex fori, or law of the place where the action is brought,² it follows that it is no objection to the specific performance in England of a foreign contract that the foreign law might have given no such remedy.

Accordingly a marriage contract made in France was specifically executed here, the parties to it having come to this country as refugees.³

§ 127. This jurisdiction is not confined to cases of contracts relative to personal property, but extends to those relative to real or immoveable property, where the defendant is within the jurisdiction of the Court. The maxim is "Æquitas agit in personam," and any operation of the judgment on the immoveable estate abroad is not direct but indirect, and only through the medium of the person affected by the judgment. Thus where Sir Philip Carteret, the owner of the island of Sark, had mortgaged it, and a bill was brought against him by the mortgagee for foreclosure, a plea put in by the defendant that the island was not within the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery was overruled.⁴

Contracts relating to immoveable property.

§ 128. But the Court has been careful to confine its jurisdiction to relief arising strictly from privity of contract: it has nothing to do with rights arising from privity of estate in any other country.⁵ So in doctrine.

§ 129. It has been said by Mr. Justice Story² that "the doctrine of the English Courts of Chancery on this head of jurisdiction seems carried to an extent which may perhaps in some cases not find a perfect warrant in the general principles of international public law." And Lord Romilly M.R. in the case last cited, adopting this remark, expressed his disposition not to go a step further than the cases warranted and demanded.³

The ship arrived in this country. The plaintiff claimed the abatement, the amount of which he alleged could be ascertained by a survey, which Herwig and the master refused and declined to complete except on payment of the full price. The bill was against Herwig and the master, and prayed specific performance and an injunction against removing the ship. This injunction was granted by Malins V.C., and upheld by James and Mellish L.JJ. Their Lordships drew a distinction between an action for damages and the suit. If it had been the former it was said that the action must have been in the forum of the defendant. "But where," said James L.J., "the contract as in this case though made abroad is to deliver a thing in specie to a person in this country, and the thing itself is brought here, then the Court here, in the exercise of its discretion, will see that the thing to be delivered in this country does not leave this country, so as to defeat the right of the plaintiff to have it so delivered."¹ The law thus laid down seems to create an exception to the general principle of international law, which requires the plaintiff to seek the defendant and to sue in his forum. The decision is remarkable, but it has the authority of three unanimous judges.

§ 131. It should be added that service of a writ or notice of a writ of summons may be allowed out of the jurisdiction when any contract affecting land or hereditaments within the jurisdiction is sought to be enforced in the action, or when the action is founded on any breach or alleged breach within the jurisdiction of any contract, wherever made, which, according to the terms thereof, ought to be performed within the jurisdiction, unless the defendant be domiciled or ordinarily resident in Scotland or Ireland.²

xii. Quasi-contracts in respect of which the Court has jurisdiction.

§ 132. There is a class of quasi-contracts in respect of which the Court entertains jurisdiction, viz. where the relationship of vendor and purchaser is constituted by the exercise of those compulsory powers of railway and other companies which are conferred Quasi-

under Lands
Clauses
Act.

by the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, and similar statutes. They are here called quasi-contracts, because when the proceedings are strictly under the statute there is an absence on the part of the man whose land is taken on that volition, which seems an essential element in all true contracts.

Effect of notice to treat.

§ 133. It was at one time supposed that the mere notice to treat constituted the relation of vendor and purchaser to such an extent that a suit in Equity could thereupon be maintained. But it is now well ascertained that such is not the case, and that though the notice constitutes the relation for certain purposes, such as that the particular lands to be taken are fixed, and that the company cannot get rid of the obligation to take nor the landowner of the obligation to give up these lands, yet that there is no contract between the parties and no ground for equitable intervention.¹

Procedure
after the notice.

§ 134. After this notice is given, the Act points out the method in which the purchase-money is to be ascertained. If the amount claimed do not exceed 50*l.* it is to be settled by two justices: if it exceed 50*l.* it is to be settled by arbitration if the landowner so require, but otherwise by a jury, to be summoned at the instance of the company.²

Refusal to proceed after the notice.

§ 135. If after notice given the landowner refuse to convey, the company can proceed against him under their statutory powers, but have no ground for equitable relief: and conversely if after notice the company refuse to proceed, the landowner cannot, it is conceived, generally sue in Equity; but he may apply for a mandamus to compel the company to proceed under the statute to ascertain the compensation money payable.³

§ 136. There is one case,¹ however, in which jurisdiction was entertained by the Court of Chancery to enforce on the railway company proceedings under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act. The question was how far a piece of land came within the definition of curtilage, so that if the company took any part they could be compelled to take the whole under sect. 92 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act. The company gave a notice to take the part: the plaintiff gave a counter-notice to take the whole: the company took possession of part, and the plaintiff thereupon filed his bill and obtained at the hearing a declaration that the company were liable to take the whole and a reference for title; when the case came on for further consideration² the plaintiff's counsel admitted that there was no precedent pointing out what course was to be pursued; but they asked and obtained a direction that the defendant company should proceed under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act to ascertain the amount payable for the value of the land, and directions for the payment of this amount and execution of the conveyance. The question of jurisdiction to make such a decree as was made does not seem to have been raised at the hearing.

PART I.
Ch. ii.

The company forced to proceed.

§ 137. After the ascertainment of the amount of purchase-money, the equitable jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery was clear. There then exists what has been called a parliamentary contract, and the performance of that so-called contract could not be enforced at Common Law, for the Courts of Common Law having no machinery for investigating the title or settling the conveyance could not do complete justice between the parties; but a suit might have been maintained in Equity by either party to carry into execution this quasi-contract.¹ For this purpose it seems to have been considered immaterial whether the compensation money had been ascertained in strict pursuance of the Act or otherwise. In *Mason v. Stokes Bay Pier & Railway Co.*² and *Harding v. The Metropolitan Railway Co.*³ the compensation money was ascertained by statutory arbitrations; in *Nash v. The Worcester Improvement Commissioners*⁴ by the verdict of a jury; in *Inge v. Birmingham Wolverhampton & Stour Valley Railway Co.*⁵ the compensation was settled by correspondence; in *The Regent's Canal Co. v. Ware*⁶ by arbitrators appointed under a written agreement; and in *Watts v. Watts*⁷ by two surveyors named by parol; and in all these cases, as well where the Act was as where it was not strictly pursued, the Court of Chancery entertained jurisdiction. In the latter class of cases the relation constituted approached to, if it did not assume, the character of true contract.

Application to quasi-
contracts of rules relating to
contracts.

§ 138. When the quasi-contract has been established by notice and the ascertainment of the price, all the ordinary rules which prevail between vendor and purchaser apply unless excluded by statutory enactment. On this principle a railway company has been held liable to pay interest on the purchase-money in a case in which an ordinary purchaser would have been so liable.⁸

§ 139. It is probably hardly needful to observe that, if, after statutory notice, a contract should be entered into between the company and the landowner, such a contract may be the subject-matter of an action for specific performance, just in the same way as any other contract.¹ It is none the less a contract because the relations between the parties began under the statutory powers of the company.

CHAPTER III.

OF CONTRACTS WITH A PENAL OR OTHER LIKE SUM.

PART I.
Ch. iii.

Effect on the jurisdiction.

§ 140. FROM the principles stated in the last chapter, it appears that where a contract is substantially performed by the payment of a sum of money, the Common Law remedy being adequate, Equity will not interfere. Hence, in cases where there is added to the contract a clause for the payment of a sum of money in the event of non-performance, the question arises whether the contract will be satisfied by its payment, or whether it will not. In the former case, Equity will not interfere; in the latter it may.

The question
stated.

§ 141. The question always is, What is the contract? Is it that one certain act shall be done, with a sum annexed, whether by way of penalty or damages, to secure the performance of this very act? or is it that one of two things shall be done at the election of the party who has to perform the contract, namely, the performance of the act or the payment of the sum of money? If the former, the fact of the penal or other like sum's being annexed will not prevent the Court's enforcing performance of the very act, and thus carrying into execution the intention of the parties:¹ if the latter, the contract is satisfied by the payment of a sum of money, and there is no ground for proceeding against the party having the election to compel the performance of the other alternative.

¹ Howard v. Hopkins, 2 Atk. 371; French v. Macale, 2 Dr. & War. 269; Roper v. Bartholomew, 12 Pri. 797.

§ 142. From what has been said it will be gathered that contracts of the kind now under discussion are divisible into three classes :—

PART I.
Ch. iii.

Contracts
of the kind classified.

(i.) Where the sum mentioned is strictly a penalty—a sum named by way of securing the performance of the contract, as the penalty in a bond :

(ii.) Where the sum named is to be paid as liquidated damages for a breach of the contract :

(iii.) Where the sum named is an amount the payment of which may be substituted for the performance of the act at the election of the person by whom the money is to be paid or the act done.

Where the stipulated payment comes under either of the two first-mentioned heads, the Court will enforce the contract, if in other respects it can and ought to be enforced, just in the same way as a contract not to do a particular act with a penalty added to secure its performance or a sum named as liquidated damages may be specifically enforced by means of an injunction against breaking it. On the other hand, where the contract comes under the third head, it is satisfied by the payment of the money, and there is no ground for the Court to compel the specific performance of the other alternative of the contract.¹ It will be convenient to consider the three classes of cases separately.

§ 143. (i.) A penalty (strictly so called) attached to the breach of the contract will not prevent it from being specifically enforced.

“The general rule of Equity,” said Lord St.

c. 11: secondly, covenants not to do an act, with liquidated damages to be paid if the act is done, which are not within the statute: and thirdly, covenants that acts shall not be done unless subject to a certain payment.”

PART I.
Ch. iii.

Leonards,¹ “is that if a thing be agreed upon to be done, though there is a penalty annexed to secure its performance, yet the very thing itself must be done. If a man, for instance, agree to settle an estate and execute his bond for 600*l.* as a security for the performance of his contract, he will not be allowed to pay the forfeit of his bond and avoid his agreement, but he will be compelled to settle the estate in specific performance of his agreement.² So if a man covenant to abstain from doing a certain act, and agree that if he do it he will pay a sum of money; it would seem that he would be compelled to abstain from doing that act, and, just as in the converse case, he cannot elect to break his engagement by paying for his violation of the contract.”

Instances.

§ 144. Thus where two persons entered into articles for the sale of an estate, with a proviso that, if either side should break the contract, he should pay 100*l.* to the other, and the defendant, by his answer, insisted that it was the intention of both parties that, upon either paying 100*l.*, the contract should be absolutely void, Lord Hardwicke nevertheless decreed specific performance of the contract to sell.³ In another case, the condition recited a contract for a settlement comprising a sum of money and also real estate: the penalty was double this sum of money, but had no relation to the real estate: the Court granted specific performance of the contract embodied in the condition.⁴ And where a father, in consideration of his daughters' giving up a part of their interest in the property, agreed to make up their incomes arising out of it to 200*l.* a year, and entered into a bond for the payment of such sum as might be needful for that purpose, and the bond recited the contract, the Court took this as evidence of the contract, and accordingly granted relief on the foot of it beyond the bond;¹ and in a case which went to the House of Lords, a contract (contained in the condition of a bond) to give certain property by will or otherwise, was held not to be satisfied by the penalty, but was specifically performed.²

§ 145. So, again, a contract not to carry on a particular kind of business within certain limits expressed in the condition to a bond can be enforced by injunction.³

Contract not to carry on business.

§ 146. (ii.) The difference between penalty and liquidated damages is, as regards the Common Law remedy, most material. For according to Common Law, if the sum named is not a penalty, but the agreed amount of liquidated damages, the contract is satisfied either by its performance or the payment of the money.⁴ But as regards the equitable remedy the distinction is unimportant: for the fact that the sum named is the amount agreed to be paid as liquidated damages is, equally with a penalty strictly so called, ineffectual to prevent the Court from enforcing the contract in specie.⁵

ii. Distinction between penalty and liquidated damages.

§ 147. The simplest illustration of this is the ordinary case of a stipulation on the sale of real estate that if the purchaser fail to comply with the condition he shall forfeit the deposit, and the vendor shall be at liberty to resell and recover as and for liquidated damages the deficiency on such resale and the expenses.¹ Such a condition has never been held to give the purchaser the option of refusing to perform his contract if he choose to pay the penalty, nor to stand in the way of specific performance of the contract.

*French v.
Macale.*

§ 148. In *French v. Macale*² Lord St. Leonards fully discussed the law as to compelling the performance of contracts of the kind under discussion. In that case there was a covenant in a farming lease “not to burn or bate the demised premises or any part thereof under the penalty of 10*l.* per acre to be recovered as the reserved yearly rent for every acre so burned.” His Lordship appears to have considered this increased rent as in the nature of liquidated damages and not a penalty, but nevertheless he granted an injunction against the burning, saying after a careful review of the authorities that in every case of this nature the question is one of construction, and that the Court will always interfere unless there is evidence of an intention that the act is to be permitted to be done on payment of the increased rent.

Lake.*

§ 149. In one case a deed was executed dissolving a partnership between H. and L., and containing a recital that it had been agreed that the deed should contain a covenant by L. not to carry on the trade within one mile from the old place of business “without paying to H., as or by way of stated or liquidated damages,” a sum named. In a subsequent part of the deed there was an absolute covenant not to carry on the trade within that limit, followed by a proviso that if L. should act contrary to or in infringement of that agreement he would immediately thereupon pay to H. the sum of 1,500*l.* by way of liquidated damages. Notwithstanding the recital and the form used, it was held that L. was not entitled to break the covenant on paying the 1,500*l.*, and an injunction was granted.¹

² 2 Dr. & War. 269.

PART I.
Ch. iii.

§ 150. The same view was put forward, though perhaps in slightly different language, by the Lords Justices in Coles v. Sims.² That was a case in which there were mutual covenants between a vendor of part of his land and the purchaser of that part as to building on the sold and unsold parts, with a stipulation for payment of liquidated damages in case of breach of covenant. On an application for an interim injunction (which was granted), Knight Bruce L.J. said:³ "If I were now deciding the cause, I should probably come to the conclusion that in a case where a covenant is protected (if I may use the expression) by a provision for liquidated damages, it must be in the judicial discretion of the Court, according to the contents of the whole instrument and the nature and circumstances of the particular instance, whether to hold itself bound or not bound upon the ground of it to refuse an injunction if otherwise proper to be granted: and that in the present case, the circumstances are such as to render it right for the Court to grant an injunction." Turner L.J. added: "The question in such cases, as I conceive, is whether the clause is inserted by way of penalty or whether it amounts to a stipulation for liberty to do a certain act on payment of a certain sum."

Coles v.
Sims.

§ 151. Where the contract to do or not to do the act is distinct from the obligation to pay a sum of money, it seems that either the contract or the obligation may be sued on.

Where

and to pay are distinct.

has a right at Law and in Equity, and can obtain relief in either, but not in both, Courts."

Where election not imported.

§ 152. It is clear that the fact that the contract may be comprised in a bond does not of itself import any election to pay the money and refuse to do the act.¹

iii. Alternative
contracts.

§ 153. (iii.) In the third class of contracts, which may be distinguished as alternative contracts, the intention is that a thing shall be done or a sum of money paid at the election of the person bound to do or pay.

In these cases the contract is as fully performed by the payment of the money as by the doing of the act, and therefore where the money is paid or tendered there is no ground for interference by way of specific performance or injunction.

Intention primarily governs
the construction.

§ 154. The question to which of the three foregoing classes of contracts any particular one belongs is of course a question of construction. In considering it "the Courts must, in all cases, look for their guide to the primary intention of the parties, as it may be gathered from the instrument upon the effect of which they are to decide, and for that purpose to ascertain the precise nature and object of the obligation."² Consequently each case depends on its own circumstances, but it may be noticed that "a Court of Equity is in general anxious to treat the penalty as being merely a mode of securing the due performance of the act contracted to be done, and not as a sum of money really intended to be paid;"³ and that, "on the other hand, it is certainly open to parties who are entering into contracts to stipulate that on failure to perform what has been agreed to be done, a fixed sum shall be paid by way of compensation."¹

PART I.
Ch. iii.

§ 155. On this question it is by no means conclusive that the contract may be alternative in its form, for nevertheless the Court may clearly see that it is essentially a contract to do one of the alternatives: so that where there was a contract to renew a certain lease, with an addition of three years to the original term, or to answer the want thereof in damages, the Court decreed specific performance of the lease, the second alternative only expressing what the law would imply.²

Alternative form not conclusive.

§ 156. The largeness or smallness of the sum named is no reason for considering it a mere penalty, unless that be the apparent intention:³ but where the amount of the penalty is small, as compared with the value of the subject of the contract, it has been considered a reason for treating the sum reserved as a mere penalty, and not in the nature of an alternative contract.⁴

The amount
of the penalty.

§ 157. In a case where a man, being very uncertain what estate he should derive from his father, entered into a bond in 5,000*l.*, on the marriage of his daughter, to settle one-third of such property, and the contract so to settle was recited in the condition of the bond, it was specifically performed in full, and not up to 5,000*l.* only.⁵ "Such agreement," said Lord Macclesfield,⁶ "was not to be the weaker but the stronger for the penalty."

the benefit of the sum, if paid, in another, is a strong circumstance against considering the contract alternative in its nature: thus where, on a marriage, the husband's father gave a bond for the payment of 600*l.* to the wife's father, his executors or administrators, in the penalty of 1,200*l.* if he did not convey certain lands for the benefit of the husband and wife and their issue, Lord Hardwicke held that the obligor was not at liberty to pay the 600*l.*, or settle the lands, at his election, but compelled the specific performance of the contract to settle,—partly on the ground that the 600*l.* would not have gone to the benefit of the husband and wife and their issue, but of the wife's father and his representatives, and partly that the lands to be settled were worth much more than 600*l.*¹

Single sum and contin-ing act.

§ 159. Where the sum reserved is single, and the act stipulated for or against is in its nature continuing or recurring, as, for instance, particular modes of cultivating a farm, the sum will be considered as a security and not an alternative.²

Sums
variable.

§ 160. On the other hand where the sum or sums made payable vary in frequency of payment or amount according to the thing to be done or abstained from, the Courts have, in many cases, found that the payment is an alternative.

Woodward v.
Gyles.

§ 161. In Woodward v. Gyles,³ a covenant by the defendant not to plough meadow land, and if he did, to pay so much an acre, was held not to be a fit case for an injunction restraining the ploughing: but the exact form of the covenant does not appear. “If,” said Lord St. Leonards,⁴ “as in *Woodward v. that the party is to be at liberty to do the act if he choose to pay the increased rent, of course the Court cannot interfere, because this Court never interferes against the express contract of the parties."

PART I.
Ch. iii.

§ 162. In *Rolfe v. Peterson*¹ the question was whether the payment was a penalty and so came within the doctrine of equitable relief against penalties: but of it Lord Loughborough said, in Hardy v. Martin,² "That was a case of a demise of land to a lessee to do with the land as he thought proper: but if he used it one way he was to pay one rent and if another way another rent." Similarly, a covenant in a farm lease not to do certain things "under an increased rent of," &c., was held to give the tenant the right to do the act on paying the increased rent,³ and a contract to renew perpetually "under a penalty of 70*l.*" was held alternative.⁴

Rolfe v.
Peterson.

§ 163. But where, in addition to the increased rent, there is a stipulation that the act provided against shall be a forfeiture of the covenantor's interest, the sum is held to be a security only and not an alternative: and consequently the Court would restrain the doing of the act:⁵ and, of course, the usual form of lease giving the lessor the right to re-enter and avoid the lease on breach of covenant offers no impediment to the enforcement of the covenants specifically.⁶

Where a

§ 164. Where the contract would be unreasonable unless it gives an option to the person stipulating to pay the sum, this will be a strong circumstance for treating the contract as alternative. So where a lady, administratrix of her husband, covenanted, under a

PARTIES TO THE ACTION.

CHAPTER I.

OF THE GENERAL RULE.

§ 165. IN considering the subject of this chapter it will be convenient to treat separately (I.) of the rules formerly applicable to suits for specific performance in the Court of Chancery, and (II.) of the rules now applicable to like actions in the High Court. It is not yet possible entirely to neglect the old practice, as it will no doubt be appealed to from time to time as assisting the Court under the new practice.

PART II.

Division
of the subject.

I. As to the former practice of the Court of Chancery.

§ 166. The general rule with regard to suits to enforce contracts was that the parties to the contract, or their representatives, were the necessary and sufficient parties to the suit—that all the parties to the contract should be parties to the suit and no one else.¹ The contract is what constitutes the rights and regulates the liabilities of the parties: in a stranger there is no liability: and against him, therefore, there

§ 167. It made no difference, that the stranger to the contract might be a necessary party to the conveyance, as a judgment creditor, or a legal or equitable mortgagee, or a person interested in the equity of redemption.² In *Tasker v. Small*³ the bill was filed by the purchaser of an equity of redemption against the vendors, and Phillips, the first mortgagee, was made a defendant on the ground that he refused to convey without having competent authority for so doing. Lord Cottenham, however, held that the bill could not be maintained against him.

§ 168. Where the owner of land contracted to grant a lease to A. and then mortgaged the land to B. with notice of the contract, and B. did not dispute A.'s right to the lease, it was held that B. was not a proper party to a suit by A. for specific performance.⁴

§ 169. And so where a steward was made a party as being receiver of the rents, and having the title-deeds in his possession, the bill was dismissed as against him.⁵ And in a suit to enforce a contract made by a mortgagee under a power of sale, the mortgagor was not a necessary party;⁶ unless the pur-

§ 170. In a case before Shadwell V.C., where the vendor sold the same property twice over and the bill was brought by the first purchaser against the vendor and the second purchaser, it was dismissed (without costs) as against the latter, though specific performance was decreed as against the original contractor:² this was affirmed by Lord Lyndhurst after two arguments: and Turner L.J. laid down the same doctrine.³

Same

§ 171. Again, where two houses held under one lease were sold in separate lots at the same auction, and it was stipulated that each purchaser should be a party to the other's assignment, it was held that the purchaser of Lot 2 was not a necessary party to a suit to enforce the contract with the purchaser of Lot 1.⁴

And a bill by a purchaser for specific performance could not be sustained against parties to a previous contract to sell the same land which the bill impeached.⁵

§ 172. In connection with the question under consideration it may be noticed that a direction in an order that A. should convey included in effect mortgagees and all other necessary conveying parties, and the omission of the words commonly inserted that A. "and all other necessary parties if any" should convey was immaterial.⁶

by asserting his right as unpaid vendor, the lessees were held proper parties.¹

§ 174. On the other hand, the general principle under discussion was strongly illustrated by the case of Robertson v. The Great Western Railway Company.² The plaintiff had agreed to sell to the defendants a piece of land, and to buy up the right then vested in his tenant: the defendants having entered before payment of the purchase-money, they were served with notices not to trespass on the land both by the plaintiff and his tenant. The plaintiff then brought his bill for a specific performance and to restrain the trespass, to which the defendants demurred, on the ground that the tenant was not a party. Shadwell V.C. allowed the demurrer; but the demurrer was overruled by Lord Cottenham on the grounds that the object of the suit was a specific performance, and that the company might be restrained from entering without payment of the purchase-money, whether that entry did or did not affect the tenant.

Persons having adverse rights.

§ 175. In the Court of Chancery persons having adverse or inconsistent rights in the subject-matter of the suit could not be joined as plaintiffs;³ nor could a person who had no interest be joined as plaintiff with one who had.⁴ The importance of the doctrine of misjoinder was, however, diminished by the 49th section of the Chancery Procedure Act, 1852.⁵ In some cases, persons claiming adversely might be made defendants.⁶

PART II.
Ch. i.

Exceptions to
general rule.

§ 177. One case where the parties to the original contract were not those to the suit was, where there had been a novation or new contract substituted for the original one by the intervention of a new person; in which case the party in whose place the new person was introduced, being no longer a party to the contract, ceased to be a proper party to the suit, and it had to be carried on between the parties to the new contract. Thus, where A. agrees to sell to B., and, before completion, B. contracts to sell to C., and A. accepts C. as the purchaser, this may amount to a new contract; and even where it did not strictly do so, B. might be an unnecessary party to the suit.²

Novation.

§ 178. One of the most remarkable instances of novation occurs in sales on and is the result of the custom of the Stock Exchange. The vendor's broker sells shares to a jobber, the jobber sells to another broker, or to several brokers of several purchasers, and at last the name of the ultimate purchaser of the shares is handed in by his broker on the "name day" and comes finally to the vendor's broker; the transfer is made by the original vendor to the ultimate purchaser, and all intermediate sales, although they may be numerous, are eliminated, and by novation the only contract left standing is between the first vendor and the last purchaser.³ prior

contract.

§ 180. Another exception arose from the existence of an interest in the estate bought or the money paid derived from a contract anterior to the contract for sale. In these cases the person thus interested in the fruit of the contract appears to have been a proper party to the suit.

Instances.

§ 181. Therefore when A. had contracted to purchase an estate from B., having previously agreed with C. to sell the estate to him, and a contract to that effect was afterwards entered into between A. and C., A. and C. subsequently brought a bill for performance against B., and it was held by Knight-Bruce (then) V.C. that they were both proper parties.¹ The Vice Chancellor considered that *Tasker v. Small*² had little or no application to the case before him,¹ and appears to have rested his decision on the ground that both the plaintiffs had, at the institution of the suit, an interest in the subject-matter of it.³ And from another case it may be gathered that if A. contracted to purchase from B., and A. then contracted with C. that B. should convey to C., and B. had notice thereof, A. could not enforce the contract against B. without joining C. as a party.⁴ In like manner a person who by virtue of an antecedent contract with the vendor claimed an interest in the purchase-money was a proper party to a suit for specific performance.⁵

Remain-
derman.

§ 182. In cases of contracts under powers, the question sometimes arose, whether a contract entered into by the donee of the power could be enforced by or against the remainderman, the cases in which he could sue or be sued being, of course, coextensive. PART II.

Ch. i.
 The rule by which this question was decided was that the contract was binding in those cases, and those cases only, in which it might have been enforced against the donee of the power himself, independently of any conduct on his part.¹ The grounds on which part-performance by a tenant for life will not bind the remainderman, will be considered when we come to treat of the principles of that subject.² It has already been noticed³ that the jurisdiction of Courts of Equity has, by statute, been excluded in regard to the enforcement of the contracts of a tenant in tail against those in remainder.⁴

§ 183. In one case vendors, plaintiffs to a bill for specific performance against a purchaser from them, made a sub-purchaser a defendant: and the sub-purchaser then filed his bill against his vendor and the original vendors for specific performance: to this the original vendors objected that they were not proper parties: but it was held that they had precluded themselves from the objection by the course they had pursued.⁵ Objection precluded by pleading.

§ 184. Where the circumstances of the case were fitting, some might sue for specific performance on behalf of all:⁶ thus the directors of an unincorporated joint-stock company were allowed to sue on a contract to make a lease to them in trust for the company, without joining all the shareholders.⁷ But in the converse case, there was great difficulty in applying to specific performance the principle that some might be sued on behalf of all: from the nature of such suits, however, this application of the principle was not often required for the ends of justice. In one case, a joint-stock company established by an Act of Parliament, which vested in them all property then belonging to them and authorised them to bring actions in the name of their treasurer, purchased an estate, with notice of a prior contract by the owner to grant a lease of part: on a bill by this proposed lessee against the directors and treasurer, but not the other proprietors, asking for a specific performance of the contract, Grant M.R. said, that though he could bind the interests of parties not before the Court, he could not compel them to do an act, and that the execution of the lease by a few on behalf of all would hardly be sufficient, supposing it proper. He, however, gave the plaintiffs all the relief he could, by enjoining the treasurer from disturbing their possession, though he could not compel specific performance of the contract.¹

Avoiding
multiplicity of suits.

§ 185. There are a few cases in which the strict rule that none but the parties to a contract are proper parties to a suit for its specific performance, appears to have been relaxed in order to avoid multiplicity of suits.

Lowther
v. Vis- countess of Andover.

§ 186. To this principle we may probably refer the case of Lowther v. Viscountess of Andover,² where a father entered into a covenant with the trustees of his daughter's marriage settlement to endeavour to purchase certain remainders in estates of which he was tenant for life, and, when purchased, to convey them to the uses of the settlement. The covenantor died, having previously entered into a contract for the purchase of the remainders: on a bill filed by the trustees of the settlement against the vendors, and it would seem also the personal representative of the deceased covenantor, specific performance was granted. In another case, where the Duke of Chandos had granted to A. a lease of a lodge, and also the deputation of a keepership in Enfield Chase, and A. assigned, but for part of the term only, to B., B. was allowed to maintain a bill against the Duke and A. for the rectification of a mistake in the original grant by the Duke, and for a new and sufficient grant by him.¹

PART II.
Ch. i.

§ 187. The same principle is illustrated by another case, in which a bill was filed by a purchaser against trustees for sale, to enforce the specific performance of a contract for the sale of lot A.: it was resisted on the ground that by an arrangement, to which the plaintiff was a party, part of that lot as originally described was taken from it and given to the adjoining lot B. The bill was amended to put in issue this averment, which came out in the answer, but without adding as defendant the purchaser of lot B.; and the Court held that he ought to have been made a defendant, for otherwise the vendors would be exposed to another suit from the purchaser of lot B.²

Where one lot sold is involved with adjoining lot.

§ 188. And where there were claims made by persons, strangers to the contract, adversely to both the parties to it, they might under some circumstances be made defendants to a suit for the performance of it. Thus, where an assignee under an insolvency sold a reversionary interest in stock of the insolvent, and the purchaser was served with notice not to pay the purchase-money to the assignee by a person claiming under a previous assignment by the insolvent subsequent to his insolvency, a bill was brought against the assignee and the adverse claimant, and prayed an settlement.

§ 189. And so, in the case of purchases from a voluntary settlor, where the contract was enforced by a purchaser, it seems to have been proper to make defendants, not only the vendor, but the trustees of the settlement and the persons beneficially interested under it:²—the question whether the purchaser was entitled to have the contract performed depending on whether the previous settlement was or not void against him, and that being a question which could not be tried in the absence of those who were interested under the settlement alleged to be voluntary. “I see no reason,” said Turner L.J.,³ “why it shall not be tried in a suit for specific performance, rather than be made the subject of a distinct and separate suit, the more so as it is a question which affects the validity no less than the performance of the contract.”

Multifa-riousness.

§ 190. Where the several purchasers of several lots had been joined as defendants in one suit, a demurrer for multifariousness was repeatedly allowed.⁴ “Suppose,” said Lord Kenyon M.R.,⁵ “an estate is sold in lots to different persons, a plaintiff could not include them all in one bill for a specific performance, for each party’s case would be distinct and would depend upon its own peculiar circumstances: and there must have been a distinct bill upon each contract.”

⁵ In Rayner v. Julian, 2 Dick. 677.

And a bill by several purchasers against one vendor would have been equally multifarious.¹

PART II.
Ch. i.

§ 191. But in one case in which there had been several sales of a like kind, and several purchasers joined as plaintiffs, and the difficulty in completing the sale arose from the same cause in each case, and the persons interested in the estate made no objection for multifariousness, the Court decreed specific performance of the different contracts in one suit.²

Several
contracts in one suit.

And where the purchaser had entered into two separate but simultaneous contracts (for the purchase of freeholds and leaseholds) with the same vendor, and the investigations of the two titles had gone on concurrently, Kindersley V.C. considered that the vendor was right in making both contracts the subjects of one suit for specific performance.³

II. As regards the practice of the High Court.

§ 192. No doubt the general rule will still continue to be that the parties to the contract are the necessary and sufficient parties to the action: for that is a rule of convenience and good sense.

general
rule.

§ 193. But the fact that persons may be joined as plaintiffs whose claims are alternative, or some of whom are found to have no interest in the litigation, or that a defendant is not interested in all the relief claimed now furnishes no defence:⁴ and the plaintiff may unite in the same action, and in the same statement of claim, several causes of action, subject to a power in the Court or Judge to direct separate trials of the separate causes.¹ Further, the Court or a Judge may at any stage of the proceedings order the name of any party, plaintiff or defendant, who ought to have been joined, or whose presence before the Court may be necessary, in order to enable the Court effectually and completely to adjudicate upon and settle all the questions involved in the action, to be added.²

claim.

§ 194. The new procedure by way of counter-claim affords in some cases a mode in which, in a proper case, a person who was not a party to the original action may be brought in to the proceedings.

Thus, where second mortgagees brought an action against first mortgagee, who had contracted to sell the mortgaged property under his power of sale, claiming to have the sale completed and the sale moneys applied in satisfaction of the mortgages, and the defendant delivered a counter-claim, to which he made the purchaser a co-defendant with the original plaintiffs, alleging that the concurrence of the latter in the sale was a term of the contract, and claiming specific performance; Hall V.C. held that the purchaser was properly made a party to the counter-claim.³

tered land.

§ 195. In actions for the specific performance of contracts relating to land or a charge registered under the Land Transfer Act, 1875, the Court has a special statutory power of bringing into the action any persons who have registered estates or rights in such land or charge.⁴

CHAPTER II.

OF A STRANGER TO THE CONTRACT.

§ 196. CAN a stranger to the contract sue, or be sued, for its performance? PART II.
Ch. ii.

It will be convenient to consider the two branches of this question separately. Division
of the subject.

I. As to a stranger suing.

§ 197. It is a general principle both at Common Law and in Equity, that a stranger to the contract cannot sue on it; and this is not varied by the mere fact that the stranger takes a benefit under it.¹ Generally a stranger cannot sue.

§ 198. Thus in a case, where protracted litigation had been undertaken by A. for the recovery of an estate, and in the course of these proceedings A. became greatly indebted to his solicitor, and, by a contract between A. and his brother B., A. agreed to relinquish his interest in the estate to B., in consideration of B.'s undertaking to pay the costs already incurred with interest, it was held² that the solicitor, being no party to the contract, Instance.

and having given no consideration for it, could derive no benefit under it capable of being enforced by him.

§ 199. There are, however, several apparent exceptions to this principle.

§ 200. Thus (i.) there may be cases in which, where A. has as a trustee for B. contracted with C., B. may be entitled to sue both C. and A. for performance of the contract. The case of *Touche v. Metropolitan Railway Warehousing Co.*¹ is a case of this sort. So, too, in Murray v. Flavell,² a widow who was the cestui que trust of a trust created by partnership articles was allowed to sue upon them.

ii. Agency.

§ 201. (ii.) There are cases of agency which may wear the aspect of exceptions to the rule. In *Hook v. Kinnear*³ the two defendants were tenants in common of certain lands and the defendant Kinnear having been tenant of the defendant Philips' moiety, and in arrear to him for the rent, agreed with Philips to execute to the plaintiff such lease of the entire premises as Philips and the plaintiff should agree upon, and that all the rent should be paid to Philips till the arrears due to him were satisfied: the plaintiff was no party to the contract: Philips entered into another contract with the plaintiff for a lease of the premises to the plaintiff at 30% per annum, and executed a lease of his moiety at 15% per annum: the defendant declined to do the same in respect of his moiety: and it was objected that the plaintiff as a stranger could not sue: but Lord Hardwicke overruled the objection, on the ground that Philips might be taken as the agent of the plaintiff in the contract with Kinnear, and compared it to the case of stewards entering into contracts, and their masters enforcing them.

iii. Executed
contracts.

§ 202. (iii.) There are cases of persons claiming benefits under deeds who are not parties to the deeds,¹ of persons suing for the execution of the trusts of marriage settlements who are not parties to such settlements,² and of proceedings by children under contracts antecedent to the marriages of which they are the issue. But these either refer to executed and not to executory contracts, or attract the jurisdiction of the Court on grounds other than that of the specific performance of contracts resting in feri.

PART II.
Ch. ii.

§ 203. (iv.) There is a class of cases where the nearness of relationship of one party to the contract with the party to be benefited by it was formerly supposed to give to the latter the benefit of the consideration and a right to sue on the contract. The *Physician's case*³ was the leading authority on this point: there A. made a promise to his physician, that, if he would effect a certain cure, he would pay a sum of money to the physician's daughter; and it was held that she might sue. In another case in assumpsit the plaintiffs who were husband and wife, declared that the wife's father, being seized of lands which had subsequently descended to the defendant, was about to fell 1,000l. worth of timber to raise a portion for his said daughter; and the defendant promised the father that, if he would forbear to fell the timber, he would pay the daughter 1,000l. A verdict was found for the plaintiffs; but it was moved, in arrest of judgment, that the father alone could have brought the action, but not the husband and wife: but after two arguments, the objection was overruled on the ground of the nearness of relationship.⁴ But these cases were in the year 1861 considered and deliberately disapproved dition of

by the Court of Queen's Bench, and can no longer be considered law.¹

§ 204. (v.) It seems that an exception may arise to the general principle that a stranger even though taking a benefit under a contract cannot sue on it, in cases where the contract is of such a nature and has been so far acted upon as to change the condition in life of the stranger, and to raise in him reasonable expectations grounded on the contract. Such a case might be presented by a contract between A., a rich man, and B., a poor one, that A. should take B.'s child, bring him up as a gentleman, and leave him certain property, and a part-performance of this on A.'s part. But here, any right which the child of B. might have to insist on the contract is derived, not from the contract alone, but from the conduct of A. in pursuance of it, and the wrong which the child would sustain, if the contract were carried out in part and not in whole. For no such Equity would exist where the contract remained entirely in abeyance.²

II. As to a stranger being sued.

Generally stranger cannot be sued.

§ 205. Generally a stranger to the contract is not a proper defendant to an action for enforcing it.³ But this general rule is subject to exceptions.

Exception if he gets possession of subject-matter with notice.

§ 206. If a stranger to the contract gets possession of the subject-matter of the contract with notice of it, he is or may be liable to be made a party to an action for specific performance of the contract upon the equitable ground of his conscience being affected by the notice.

§ 207. Thus where S. contracted with P. for the sale to him of an estate and afterwards conveyed it to C., who, at the time of the conveyance, had notice of P.'s contract; on a bill filed by P. against S. and C. for the enforcement of the contract between S. and P., Wigram V.C. decreed specific performance of that contract, ordered all necessary parties to convey the estate to P., and gave the plaintiff costs against both S. and C.¹

§ 208. Again, a stranger to the contract may so mix himself up with it by setting up a claim to some benefit resulting from it, as to render himself liable to be made a party to proceedings for the enforcement of the contract; as, for instance, by claiming to be interested in the purchase-money under an arrangement antecedent to the contract.²

§ 209. In some cases where a portion of the relief claimed might affect the person in actual possession of the property, that person may properly be made a party to an action for the specific performance of the contract; as for instance, where the purchasers, a railway company, being in possession of the land contracted to be purchased leased it to another railway company, who opened and worked a railway over it, and the unpaid vendors filed their bill against both companies for performance of the contract, declaration of the vendors' lien, and the appointment of a receiver.³ "Ordinarily," said Stuart V.C.,⁴ "a person not being a party to the contract ought not to be

CHAPTER III.

OF THE DEATH OF A PARTY TO THE CONTRACT.

§ 211. THE general rule, that parties to the contract must alone be parties to the action, is further modified by certain circumstances, one of which, namely, the death of a party to the contract, will now be considered. By this circumstance, with the exception to be mentioned hereafter,¹ the obligation to perform, and the right to call for the performance of, the contract devolve on the representatives of the party dying. .

If the vendor of real estate die before completion, the contract may be enforced either by the purchaser² or by the personal representative of the vendor;³ but in both cases the heir⁴ or devisee⁵ must be a party, as having an interest in disputing the contract: and it makes no difference that the legal estate is outstanding in a trustee.⁶ As a purchaser has no right to insist on having the will proved against the heir, he is not a necessary party where there are devisees of the estate in question.⁷

Trustee

§ 213. Formerly, where the heir was an infant, a difficulty arose;¹ but this has been overcome by the 7th section of the Trustee Act, 1850, by virtue of which where an infant is seized or possessed of any lands upon any trust, it is lawful for the Court to make an order, vesting such lands in such person or persons in such manner and for such estate as the Court shall direct:² and under the 30th section of the same Act, the Court is enabled, where it decrees specific performance of a contract concerning any lands, to declare that any of the parties to the action are trustees of the lands or any part of them.³ It has been held under these sections that where the contract is merely executory, the Court cannot, on petition only, declare the heir of the vendor a trustee for the purchaser,⁴ but that it can do so where, during the vendor's life, the contract has been executed by payment of the purchase-money and the execution of a formal covenant to surrender.⁵

§ 214. Where the vendor leaves a widow, who, but for the contract, would be entitled to freebench, the contract may be enforced against her, and she must be a party;⁶ and the same practice must be pursued in cases of dower of widows married since the 1st of January, 1834.⁷

§ 216. In a case² where executors of a vendor of leaseholds to a railway company filed their bill for specific performance, alleging (truly) that they had not proved the will, but before the hearing of an interlocutory motion to restrain the company from continuing in possession, the probate had been obtained, it was held that the defendants could not resist the motion on the ground of the bill's being demurrable.

§ 217. If the purchaser of realty die before completion, the contract may be enforced either by or against the vendor or the heir or devisee of the purchaser: the personal representative being a party as having an interest in disputing the contract, and as being the hand to pay the purchase-money;³ and the heir or devisee of the purchaser being a party as being the person entitled to have the estate conveyed to him, and to insist on a proper inquiry into the title.⁴

§ 219. In a case where, after a suit had been instituted by a vendor against a purchaser, and a reference of title and report in favour of it had been made, the purchaser died, the Court, on the application of his real and personal representatives, ordered the plaintiff to revive, or, in default thereof, that his bill should stand dismissed.¹

But an exception to the devolution of the liability to perform contracts by the death of one of the parties, arises in all cases in which the personal skill or taste of one of the contracting parties is required; for in such cases the death of that party discharges the contract, and exempts his personal representatives from liability for the breach of contract occasioned by non-performance after his decease,³—an exception obviously grounded on the same principle as the non-assignability of such contracts, hereafter considered.⁴ On this principle it has been decided that, if an author contract to complete a work, and die before doing so, his executors will be discharged from the contract;⁵ or, if a master contract to teach an

CHAPTER IV.

OF AN ASSIGNMENT OF THE CONTRACT OR OF THE PROPERTY.

I. Assignment of the contract.

PART II.
Ch. iv.

Assignment of the contract.

§ 222. As a general rule, the benefit of a contract may be assigned in Equity, and the assign can enforce specific performance of it, making his assignor a party.¹ Thus, for example, where there was a contract for a lease, which contained nothing to show that it was made with the assignor (who had become insolvent) from any personal motive, and the assign was solvent, the contract was enforced in favour of the assign.² Similarly, where there is nothing personal in the contract or the motives to it, a person who has appeared as agent may afterwards disclose himself as a principal, and enforce the contract in his own name.³ And where A. contracted for an estate from B., A. having previously agreed with C. to sell the estate to him, and B. resisted performance on this amongst other grounds ; the price being adequate, and B. not suggesting that

² Crosbie v. Tooke, 1 My. & K. 431; Morgan v. Rhodes, id. 435. But see Dowell v. Dew, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 345, where Knight-Bruce

V.C. refused to grant specific performance of a contract for a lease to an assignee, except upon the terms of the assignor's entering into the covenants of the lease. This decision was affirmed by Lord Lyndhurst, 12 L. J. Ch. 158. See infra, § 227.

³ Fellowes v. Lord Gwydyr, 1 R. & My. 83.

he had ever refused, or was unwilling, or would have objected to treat with C., or might have obtained better terms from him, had he known the real circumstances of the case, specific performance was granted at the suit of A. and C.¹

PART II.
Ch. iv.

§ 223. An assign of a contract by way of mortgage may enforce his security by means of specific performance. Thus, in a case decided by Lord Hatherley (then Wood V.C.), where A. had agreed to sell certain property to B., and then had mortgaged his interest under this contract to C., and C. had assigned his mortgage to D., it was held that D. (sub-mortgagee) might maintain a bill against the purchaser B. for the performance of the original contract between him and A.²

Assignment by way of mortgage.

§ 224. The assignability of contracts in Equity is however subject to some exceptions and limitations, which for the most part fall under one or other of the following classes, viz.: (i.) where the contract is personal; (ii.) where the contract contains a provision against assignment; and (iii.) where the assignment is illegal or contrary to public policy.

Exceptions.

§ 225. (i.) It is an obvious principle, that where the learning, skill, solvency, or any personal quality of one of the parties to the contract is a material ingredient in it, then the contract can be performed by him alone. It may be a matter of indifference to A. whether B. or C. be the purchaser of the stock or paid-up shares he is selling; but it is a matter of great moment whether a distinguished artist, or his nominee, paint a picture for which A. may have agreed to pay a certain sum. Accordingly, in the case of contracts of the latter kind, it is not competent to a person, who has appeared as agent for a principal on whose personal qualities reliance has been placed, to show himself to be the principal and to sue in his own name:¹ in respect of such contracts bankruptcy confers no claim on the trustee;² and the benefit of such contracts is incapable of being assigned.³

Instances.

§ 226. Thus, where a contract established a personal relation between an author and his publisher, it was held that it was incapable of assignment.⁴ So where a coachbuilder contracted with A. to supply him with a chariot for five years, and within that period the coachbuilder assigned the contract to a third person, it was held that A. had a right to have the benefit of the judgment and taste of the coachbuilder to the end of the term, and consequently that an action brought by the coachbuilder and his assign against A. could not be maintained.⁵ So also where a lessee in insolvent circumstances suffered another person to become the apparent owner of the farm, but with a secret trust for himself, and the landlord, supposing the trustee to be the rightful owner, and trusting to his solvency, entered into a contract with him to grant him a new lease,—in a suit by the original lessee against the landlord, specific performance of this contract was refused, the Court considering that the landlord had entered into it expecting to have the covenants of a man of substance, which he could not do, as there would be no equity to compel the trustee to enter into the covenants.⁶ And so again, if a landlord trusts to the skill of a person who is in fact a secret trustee, he § 227. How far, in the case of an ordinary contract for a lease, the intended lessor relies on the solvency of the intended lessee as a personal qualification, is a point on which somewhat different views have been taken.² But it appears to be now clear from the judgments of Lord Lyndhurst and Lord Chelmsford that such contracts are assignable and may be enforced by the assign.³

for leases.

§ 228. Again it is presumed to be clear that if A. owed B. 1000*l*. and B. then agreed to buy from A. an estate for 2000*l*., no assign of A. could sue B. for performance except upon the terms of giving B. the benefit of the set-off of 1000*l*.⁴

Where
there is a

wishing to oblige the Lord Chancellor, entered into articles; but on discovering who was the real purchaser, refused to complete: according to the report in Vernon, the plaintiff's bill was dismissed, and the case is considered an authority for the principle established by such dismissal; for, though it appears that specific performance was ultimately granted, it seems to have been only on payment by the plaintiff of the full value of the estate, being a sum greater than that originally agreed on.¹ Lord Thurlow showed an inclination to disregard these personal motives, considering it to be immaterial in a contract for an annuity, that the defendant was in fact a trustee for the son of the plaintiff, with whom he had refused to deal.² But Lord Eldon expressed dissatisfaction with that decision;³ and the law seems now to be that where one person is deceived as to the real party with whom he is contracting, and that deception either induces the contract or renders its terms more beneficial to the deceiving party or more onerous to the deceived, or where it occasions any other loss or inconvenience to the deceived party, there the contract cannot be enforced against him: but that where none of these circumstances can be shown to follow from the deception, the contract may be enforced.⁴ contract enters as an element into the contract which I am willing to make, error with regard to the person destroys my consent, and consequently annuls the contract On the contrary, where the consideration of the person with whom I thought I was contracting does not enter at all into the contract, and I should have been equally willing to make the contract with any person whomsoever as with him with whom I thought I was contracting, the contract ought to stand."

PART II.
Ch. iv.

§ 231. The same principle of course applies to assignments. So where a contract for a lease was entered into by a lady with her son-in-law for his personal accommodation in the mansion house and demesne lands, in the nature of a family transaction, the Court refused specific performance at the suit of his assignees in bankruptcy.¹

The principle illustrated.

§ 232. (ii.) Where the contract stipulates that the instrument to be executed in performance of it shall contain a proviso against assignment, this operates to prevent not only an assignment of the interest when perfected, but also of the contract to grant it.² But the benefit of the proviso may of course be waived for the purposes of specific performance; as where the assign of the intended lessee was recognised by the intended lessor as tenant.³

ii. Where there is a proviso against assignment.

§ 233. (iii.) The statute 32 Henry VIII., c. 9, which is intituled the Bill of bracery and buying of titles, prohibits any person from selling or buying any pretended rights or titles to any lands, except the vendor has been in possession of the same, or of the reversion, or in receipt of the rents thereof, for a year before the sale; but it provides that it shall be lawful for the person in possession to buy in any pretended title. In Sharp v. Carter,¹ and Hitchens v. Landor,² pleas founded on this statute were allowed. In a case³ before the Court of Common Pleas, A. the owner of a term died in 1828, and B. his brother, who had previously been in possession of part of the premises, then took possession of the whole, and continued so until 1829, when he died, leaving all his interest in the property to C., who thereupon entered and remained in undisputed possession until 1841, when D., a brother of A., the original termor, took out administration to him, and sold his interest in the property, as such administrator, for 10%: the transaction was held to be void both by the Common Law and under the statute. Wherever a contract gives rise to a pretended right or title to any lands and to nothing more, the assignment of such a contract would be within the statute.

Transfer of expectancy.

§ 234. But a transfer of an expectancy is not within the mischief of the statute; for the sale of an expectancy is not an allegation of any present right or title, but of the possibility of one thereafter to exist.⁴

Maintenance.

§ 235. The principle on which the statute of Henry VIII. is founded, and which gives rise to the doctrines of champerty and maintenance, namely, that persons ought not to be allowed to come in for the mere purpose of litigating rights which others are not disposed to enforce, applies to render void some cases of assignment which are not strictly within the above statute. Thus, whilst it is clearly lawful to assign a right at the time undisputed, and if, from circumstances afterwards discovered, a necessity arises for litigation against third parties, the assign may maintain his action;¹ yet it is as clearly against public policy to allow of the assignment of a mere naked right to bring an action for a matter in dispute.² On this ground the Irish Court of Chancery refused its assistance to enforce the performance of a contract by a person out of possession, to grant a present lease to a person who was at the time apprised that he could not obtain possession except by a suit.³ "I do not hesitate to say," said Turner L.J.⁴ "that, in my opinion, the right to complain of a fraud is not a marketable commodity, and that if it appears that an agreement for purchase has been entered into for the purpose of acquiring such a right, the purchaser cannot call upon this Court to enforce specific performance of the agreement. Such a transaction, if not in strictness amounting to maintenance, savours of it too much for this Court to give its aid to enforce the agreement."

§ 236. Upon principles of public policy contracts by which railway or public companies seek to devolve business, or delegate powers, with which they are entrusted, on persons to whom the legislature has not entrusted them, and on whom it has not attached the same responsibilities that it has on the companies, are incapable of being enforced by a Court of Equity.⁵

“If,” said Lord Rosslyn,² “he” (the transferee) “is purchaser with notice, he is liable to the same equity, stands in his place, and is bound to do that which the person he represents would be bound to do by the decree.” This principle has been acted on in numerous cases.³

by notice.

§ 243. Where a person having a prior title gets in the subsequent estate which is affected by the contract, and has notice, he cannot protect himself from the performance of the contract by his elder title: thus, where an equitable mortgagor entered into a contract for a lease, and then the mortgagee, whose mortgage was prior to the contract, bought the estate with notice, he was held bound to specifically perform the contract:² and again where A., having only the equity of redemption, agreed to sell to B., and subsequently both A. and his mortgagee conveyed to C., who had notice of A.'s contract with B., it was held that B. might enforce specific performance against C.³

Mortlock
v. Buller.

§ 244. This principle of notice, under somewhat peculiar circumstances, was applied by Lord Eldon in the case of Mortlock v. Buller:⁴ there the plaintiff alleged that a contract had been entered into by trustees of a marriage settlement, who had a power to sell with the consent of the husband and wife: after the bill was filed, the wife died, and the husband's estate for life and remainder in fee were brought together, and the legal power of sale in the trustees was extinguished. But Lord Eldon said that if the purchaser had entered into the contract with the approbation of the husband and wife, as was required by the settlement, the contract bound the estate, and should be made good by those who took interests, if it could not out of the power.

CHAPTER V.

OF THE LIABILITY OF COMPANIES FOR THE CONTRACTS OF THEIR PROMOTERS.

PART II.
Ch. v.

The doctrine introduced

§ 246. ANOTHER very important exception to the general rule, as to parties to the contract alone being parties to the action, is furnished by the rule that in certain cases a public company may after incorporation be sued for the specific performance of contracts entered into by the promoters before incorporation.

in some cases by statute,

§ 247. In the case of companies incorporated by certificate under the provisions of the Railways Construction Facilities Act, 1864, contracts relative to the purchase or taking of lands for the railway entered into by the promoters before the incorporation of the company by the certificate are (by sect. 30) made as binding on the company as if they had been entered into by the company. In the case of other companies the doctrine rests upon decision, and was introduced and acted upon by Lord Cottenham, on the ground that the company stands in the place of the promoters, or, to use the language of Lord Jeffrey in the Court of Session, that the fact of “a party having passed from the chrysalis to the butterfly state”¹ creates no difficulty in the enforcement of such a contract. This doctrine thus established has, as before stated, been subsequently made binding

by statute upon a particular class of railway companies.

PART II.
Ch. v.

§ 248. The principle was first introduced in the case of Edwards v. The Grand Junction Railway Co.:¹ there Moss, who was the agent of the promoters of a railway, entered into a contract with the trustees of a public highway, whilst the railway Bill was before Parliament, by which Moss agreed that he would enter into a contract to the effect of certain clauses which the trustees had been desirous to have inserted into the Bill, and would get the same confirmed under the seal of the company intended to be incorporated,—the contract being expressed to be made on the understanding that the trustees should offer no opposition to the Bill, and that the contract should be void on Moss's delivering to the trustees the engagement of the intended company to the same effect. The Bill passed: the company proposed to make a road across the railway of a narrower width than that stipulated for by the clauses before mentioned: on a bill filed by the trustees against the company for a performance of the contract and an injunction, the company was held to be bound by the contract entered into by the promoters before incorporation. "The question," said Lord Cottenham, in delivering judgment,² "is not whether there be any binding contract at Law, but whether this Court will permit the company to use their powers under the Act in direct opposition to the arrangement made with the trustees prior to the Act, upon the faith of which they were permitted to obtain such powers. If the company and the projectors cannot be identified, still it is clear that the company have succeeded to, and are now in possession of, all that the projectors had before: they are entitled to all their rights, and subject to all their liabilities. If any one had individually projected such a scheme, and, in prosecution of it, had entered into arrangements, and then had sold and assigned all his interest in it to another, there would be no legal obligation between those who had dealt with the original projector and such purchaser; but in this Court it would be otherwise. So here, as the company stand in the place of the projectors, they cannot repudiate arrangements into which such projectors had entered: they cannot exercise the powers given by Parliament to such projectors in their corporate capacity, and at the same time refuse to comply with those terms upon the faith of which all opposition to their obtaining such powers was withheld." The same principle was subsequently acted on by his Lordship in the cases of *Stanley v. The Chester and Birkenhead Railway Co.*¹ and *Lord Petre v. The Eastern Counties Railway Co.*²

Conditions under which the doctrine is applicable.

§ 249. The conditions under which the doctrine in question is applicable, if they have not been narrowed by subsequent cases, have at least been more clearly defined than they were in the cases already referred to. These conditions seem to be, (i.) that the company must have taken the benefit of the contract; and (ii.) that the contract must be for something warranted by the terms of the incorporation.

i. The company must have taken the benefit of the contract.

§ 250. (i.) The company itself, after incorporation, must either have taken the benefit of the contract, or have otherwise recognized it as a contract binding on them. It is not enough that the opposition to the intended Bill was withdrawn, as that is a consideration moving, not to the company, but to the promoters. Therefore, where a company was incorporated in consequence of the withdrawal of the plaintiff's opposition, but after that event they had not entered upon any of the land, or in anywise adopted the contract, except by fruitless negotiations, Lord Romilly M.R. refused specific performance of the contract, and declined to order the defendants to admit the validity of the contract in an action at Law;¹ and his Lordship acted on the same principle in the case, which shortly afterwards came before him, of *Preston v. The Liverpool Manchester and Newcastle Railway Co.*² In *The Earl of Lindsey v. The Great Northern Railway Co.*³ Lord Hath-erley (then V.C.) explained the principle of these cases in a way strongly supporting the first condition above stated. He considered that the cases did not proceed on the principle of contract through the agency of the promoters, but on the principle that the Court will not allow a body to exercise powers acquired by means of a previous contract and arrangement, without carrying that contract and arrangement into full effect. To this extent, the Court acts negatively; but having once acquired jurisdiction, then its action is positive as well as negative, and therefore it will not merely restrain the doing of acts contrary to the contract, but will enforce every portion of it. Lord Campbell also, in his judgment in The Eastern Counties Railway Co. v. Hawkes,⁴ supported the same view of Lord Cottenham's doctrine. But it must be added that Lord St. Leonards, from the observations he made in the last-mentioned case on Gooday v. The Colchester Railway Co.,⁵ appeared inclined to uphold that doctrine in its utmost generality, and to hold that the conduct of the directors, after the Act, in relation to the execution of their powers, cannot absolve them from liability in respect of the benefit which they secured by the withdrawal of the opposition to the Bill. Again, in Williams v. The St. George's Harbour Co.,¹ the company after incorporation had by an agreement been made parties to an action by the plaintiff against the promoters on a contract entered into by the promoters before incorporation, and had consented to a judgment in that action. That judgment, by consent, was held to be a sufficient recognition of the contract of the promoters as a contract binding on the company to give the Court of Chancery jurisdiction.

§ 251. Where the contract is within the powers of the future company, and is beneficial for the company, and the company sues upon it, the other contracting party cannot, on the ground of want of mutuality, raise any objection to the company's enforcing the contract.²

§ 252. (ii.) The second condition, viz. that the contract must be for something warranted by the terms of the incorporation, and which the company is therefore competent to perform under the powers of its Act, is established and illustrated by the case of The Caledonian and Dumbartonshire Junction Railway Co. v. The Magistrates of Helensburgh,³ which came before the House of Lords from the Court of Session in Scotland. The magistrates of Helensburgh had agreed with the promoters of the railway to afford the projected company certain facilities for the construction of the railway through the town, and to petition Parliament in favour of the Bill; and the promoters on their part agreed that the company should pay for the making of a quay and harbour, which the magistrates were to apply to Parliament for powers to make. Lord Cranworth, after animadverting on the general principle introduced by Lord Cottenham, decided the case on the ground that, in the instances before that Judge, the acts to be done were within the powers of the company when incorporated, whereas here the object of the arrangement was to apply the funds raised under legislative authority for the purpose of the railway to an object foreign from that of the railway, namely, the construction of a pier and harbour.

PART II.
Ch. v.

§ 253. Again, in Preston v. The Liverpool, Manchester, and Newcastle-upon-Tyne Junction Railway Co.,¹ Lord Cranworth held that a contract to pay 5,000*l.* to a person for not opposing a Bill in Parliament would be ultra vires of a railway company when incorporated, and therefore that it could not be enforced against the company by reason of its having been entered into by the promoters.

Contract
ultra vires.

A very similar decision was pronounced by Kindersley V.C. in *The Earl of Shrewsbury v. The North Staffordshire Railway Co.*² There the promoters had agreed to pay to the plaintiff 2,000*l.* for his support in obtaining their Act, and the directors of the company after incorporation had ratified the bargain. It was held to be ultra vires of the company and not binding, though entered into by the promoters before the passing of the Act.

§ 254. Not only have these conditions been imposed on the doctrine as laid down by Lord Cottenham, but grave doubts have been thrown on the very principles of his decisions by Lords Cranworth and Brougham and by Kindersley V.C. Thus, in the case already referred to of The Caledonian and Dumbartonshire Junction Railway Co. v. The Magistrates of Helensburgh,³

Ch. v.

Lord Cranworth, in a written judgment which had before its delivery received the concurrence of Lord Brougham, though deciding the case upon the point before mentioned, fully considered the general principle in question, and disapproved of it. His Lordship observed that the doctrine in question could be supported only on the assumption that the company when incorporated is in substance, though not in form, a body succeeding to the rights and coming into the place of the projectors; and then proceeded to show that, in his judgment, it is such a body neither in form nor in substance. The body incorporated, he argued, is not confined to the projectors, and may even include none of them: the Act of Parliament when passed becomes the charter of the company, prescribing its duties and declaring its rights: and all persons becoming shareholders have a right to consider that they are entitled to all the benefits held out by the Act, and liable to no obligation beyond those which are there indicated; that to permit other terms to be imposed on the shareholders behind the terms of incorporation, would lead to injury to the shareholders, and often to a fraud, or at least a surprise on the legislature; and that, to render special terms as to particular cases or persons binding on the company, they ought to be the subject of special clauses in the Act, whereby the whole truth could be disclosed, and neither the legislature nor any person taking shares could complain. Again, in the case of Preston v. The Liverpool, Manchester, and Newcastle-upon-Tyne Junction Railway Co.,¹ Lords Cranworth and Brougham expressed similar views of the doctrine, although the ground on which they dismissed the plaintiff's appeal was that the contract was in itself conditional on the construction of the railway. And Kindersley V.C. in a case already referred to¹ expressed himself adversely to Lord Cottenham's view.

PART II.
Ch. v.

§ 255. In this state of the authorities, it is difficult to speak with certainty as to how far the doctrine in question is to be considered as law; on the one hand, it has been repeatedly acted on by Lord Cottenham, and appears to have been adopted by Lords Campbell and St. Leonards; on the other hand, the principles upon which it rests have been criticised by Lord Hatherley (when V.C.), and have been distinctly disapproved of by Lords Brougham and Cranworth and Kindersley V.C., upon reasonings, to say the least, of the greatest weight and cogency. In the judgment of Kindersley V.C. in the case last referred to¹ will be found a very careful statement of the reasoning for and against this doctrine of Lord Cottenham. It is difficult to refuse assent to the learned Judge's conclusion that "it would be most consonant with legal principle, most just, and most for the public benefit, to hold that contracts of the promoters with landowners are not binding on the company, unless sanctioned by the Act constituting the company."²

CHAPTER VI.

OF AGENCY.

PART II.
Ch. vi.

Contracts
by agents.

§ 256. THE cases which arise where the contract is made by an agent require consideration, as sometimes affording an apparent exception to the rule that only parties to the contract can be parties to the action.

Agents appearing on contract as such.

§ 257. Where agents contract ostensibly as such, and in the names of their principals, little difficulty can occur. The principals here are the proper parties to sue and be sued, and it is, in the absence of special circumstances, improper to make such an agent a party to the action.¹ In one case, where an agent having no interest whatever was made a co-plaintiff, the bill was held to be demurrable.² But this result would not now follow.³

Agents appearing on contract as principals.

§ 258. Where, on the other hand, agents appear on the face of the contract as principals, the case is different. The principle by which these cases are regulated is laid down with great clearness by Lord Wensleydale in Higgins v. Senior.⁴ "There is no doubt," said his Lordship, "that where such an agreement is made, it is competent to show that one or both of the contracting parties were agents for other persons, and acted as such agents in making the contract, so as to give the benefit of the contract on the one hand to,¹ and charge with liability on the other,² the unnamed principals,—and this, whether the agreement be or be not required to be in writing by the Statute of Frauds; and this evidence in no way contradicts the written agreement. It does not deny that it is binding on those whom, on the face of it, it purports to bind; but shows that it also binds another, by reason that the act of the agent, in signing the agreement in pursuance of his authority, is in law the act of the principal. But, on the other hand, to allow evidence to be given that the party who appears on the face of the instrument to be personally a contracting party, is not such, would be to allow parol evidence to contradict the written agreement, which cannot be done.” The Statute of Frauds, as we shall subsequently see,³ does not require that the authority of the agent should be in writing where the contract is required to be so.

§ 259. The proposition at which we have thus arrived, that a person appearing as principal may yet have contracted as agent for another, who may, when disclosed, sue or be sued as principal, is to be qualified by all those considerations as to the reliance of one party on the personal qualities of the other, which have been referred to in considering how far the benefit of a contract is assignable in Equity.⁴ Thus it appears clear that if A. contract with B. for the performance of anything in which B. may be reasonably taken to have relied on A.’s personal character or qualities, A. cannot declare himself the agent of C. so as to place him in the same position as regards B. that A. held: and again, if A. were to contract with B. for the purchase from him of an estate which was the property of B., B. could not afterwards declare himself the agent of C., for C., not having the estate, could not perform the contract. And it may, it is conceived, be laid down that in no case can a contracting party declare himself the agent of an unnamed principal, except where the contract, if really made by the contracting party, might have been assigned by him to the party suing as principal.

Agents not
parties.

§ 260. In these cases the agent is not a necessary party to the action,¹ unless the agency be not proved, or there be special circumstances which may render it proper to make him a defendant: as where the agent claimed to have entered into the contract for his own benefit.²

Question whether party is principal or agent.

§ 261. The question may sometimes arise whether a party has, on the construction of the contract, entered into it as principal or as agent. The Commissioners of Woods and Forests were by statute authorised to enter into contracts, but the estate remained in the Crown: on a contract entered into by them under this authority, it was held on demurrer that they could not be sued for specific performance, but that the contract must be enforced in the ordinary way in the case of estates vested in the Crown.³

Both principal and agent
sued.

§ 262. In some cases both agent and principal may be sued. Thus in *Waller v. Hendon*⁴ there was a contract with the plaintiff for the purchase and renewal of a lease in the name of Hendon or such person as he should nominate or appoint. He nominated Cox, declaring he bought for him as his agent. It was ordered by Lord Macclesfield, affirming a decision at the Rolls, in a suit (in which both Hendon and Cox were defendants) for payment of the residue of the purchase-money, that they should both pay it, and that if Hendon paid it he might prosecute the decree against Cox.

PART II.
Ch. vi.

§ 263. Directors of a public company are agents of the company, and their personal liability upon contracts entered into by them is governed by the ordinary law of principal and agent. “Wherever an agent is liable,” said Lord Cairns (then L.J.), in Ferguson v. Wilson,¹ “those directors would be liable; where the liability would attach to the principal and the principal only, the liability is the liability of the company.” Accordingly it was held in the last-mentioned case, that the directors of a railway company were not liable to indemnify or pay damages to the plaintiff in respect of a resolution of the Board under which the plaintiff alleged that he was entitled to have shares in the company allotted to him; the resolution being, if anything, a contract between the plaintiff and the company. On the other hand, where directors of a company signed a contract (for a lease), on the face of which the Court considered the presumption to arise that they were, as between them and the plaintiff (the lessor), principals, they were held personally liable to perform the contract, notwithstanding that the plaintiff had in correspondence treated the company as liable to execute the contract.²

Directors.

§ 264. In the case of a contract by an agent as a principal, the agent might at Common Law sue in his own name, without in any way joining the real principal: in Chancery, however, a suit could not be maintained by the agent, unless his real principal were in some shape a party to the suit.³

PART II.
Ch. vi.Agent
sued.

§ 265. The principle already stated¹ that a person appearing on a contract as principal, though really an agent, is yet liable on the contract as principal, applies in cases of specific performance in Equity² as well as in actions for damages,³ and accordingly such an agent may be sued without the principal. In Chadwick v. Maden,⁴ where the contract was in the name of the agent, who contended that, being merely such, the bill should be dismissed as against him, Turner V.C. said that "the signature of the agreement was sufficient to subject him to the liability of performing it." In that case, after a lot had been knocked down to him, A. declared himself an agent for C., who was present, and asked to have the contract drawn up in C.'s name, which was refused, and then signed it himself; it was there held that A. was personally liable on the contract. It would, however, appear on principle, that if, at the time the contract was signed, both A. and B. understood that A. was acting merely as agent for C., and B. were afterwards to sue A. for specific performance as principal, A. might allege the understanding between himself and B. at the time, and give parol evidence of it, and that, if the allegation were proved, it might furnish a valid defence. And in many cases it is obvious that an action for specific performance against an agent alone would fail, from the incapacity of the agent to perform it.⁵

Cases
where agent a proper party.

§ 266. There are, however, special circumstances which sometimes occur, and make it proper that an agent should be a party to an action for specific performance. In almost all these cases the agent is an agent and something more.

(ii.) The contract, as we have already seen, may be so framed as to give a right of action against both principal and agent.²

ii. By reason of form of contract.

(iii.) The agent of the vendor often becomes by the contract a stakeholder of the deposit paid by the purchaser, and in that character he may be a proper party to an action.

iii. Stakeholders.

§ 267. Thus where a stakeholder threatens to pay over the deposit to the vendor, he may properly be made a party to an action by the purchaser.³ Where the stakeholder had paid over the deposit to the vendor, and difficulties had arisen in completing the contract because the deposit was not forthcoming, the purchaser made the stakeholder a party to a bill filed for specific performance, and was held entitled to a declaration that the stakeholder was (jointly with the vendor) liable to make good the deposit, which was required to discharge a mortgage on the property.⁴ So, again, the auctioneer has repeatedly been made a defendant to bills by the vendor or those claiming under him, and has been ordered to pay the deposit (less his charge⁵) into Court.⁶ And on account of the auctioneer's right to bring an action for the deposit, and of his liability in respect of it, it has been said that he can be made a co-plaintiff with the vendor,⁷ or he may interplead.⁸

OF THE DEFENCES TO THE ACTION.

CHAPTER I.

OF THE INCAPACITY TO CONTRACT.

§ 270. THE incapacity to contract of either of the parties to a contract furnishes ground on which that party may resist specific performance; and on the principle of mutuality hereafter to be considered it may also furnish a defence to the other party, though himself perfectly competent. The incapacity to contract, and the incapacity to execute a contract, are of course different questions: the one must be judged of at the time of the contract, the other when its performance is sought.

The question as to the capacity of persons to contract, as raised in actions for specific performance, being for the most part identical with the question as discussed at Common Law, and having no peculiar relation to the jurisdiction in specific performance, it is proposed only to refer to a few points of practical importance which may arise in actions of this nature.

Lunatics.

§ 274. Lunatics are under an incapacity to contract, except during lucid intervals, during which times contracts entered into by them are as binding as if made by a person of perfectly sound mind.⁴ Where a person who has entered into a contract is subsequently found lunatic from a date prior to the contract, it is competent for the other party to bring his action for specific performance, and obtain a decision of the questions whether the defendant was a lunatic at the time of the contract, and, if so, whether he had lucid intervals, and whether the contract was executed during a lucid interval:⁵ or he may ask, in the alternative, to have the contract either performed or discharged; and in the latter case the Court will allow him, if vendor, to retain out of the deposit his costs, charges, and expenses.⁶ In judging of insanity, Courts of Equity are governed by the same principles as purely Common Law Courts.⁷

PART III.
Ch. i.

§ 276. In addition to the legal incapacities to contract, Courts of Equity consider trustees, guardians, agents, and other persons standing in a confidential relation to others to be incapable (either absolutely or except under certain restrictions) of contracting for the purchase of the property entrusted to them in behalf of the persons to whom they stand thus confidentially related, and, under many circumstances, of contracting with such persons;² and this incapacity may, of course, be urged in an action for specific performance. But inasmuch as it depends on the general doctrines of the Court with regard to each of these particular relations,—and questions of this sort are more often agitated in actions to set aside the impugned transaction, than in proceedings for specific performance,—it does not appear necessary to do more here than allude to the subject generally.

CHAPTER II.

OF THE NON-CONCLUSION OF THE CONTRACT.

PART III.
Ch. ii.

There must be a concluded
contract.

§ 277. No proceedings in specific performance can, of course, be had unless a contract has actually been concluded, i.e., unless two persons have agreed on the same terms, and mutually signified to one another their assent to them. If what passed between them was but treaty or negotiation, or an expectation of contract, or an arrangement between them of an honorary nature, no specific performance can be had.

Onus of proof on plaintiff.

§ 278. The burden of proving this concluded contract is, of course, on the plaintiff: and where the law requires some peculiar mode of evidencing the contract, as, e.g., a writing, or a signature, or a seal, the question of the existence of a contract in fact and of the existence of the required evidence should ever be kept distinct in thought.¹ There may be a contract in fact though the required evidence of it may be wanting; or there may be a writing, or signature, or seal, and yet no contract in fact.

When a question of construction.

§ 279. Where there is nothing to throw light upon the existence or non-existence of a contract but some instrument or instruments, the question is really one of construction of the documents in question.

Where
there is a formal document.

§ 280. Where the contract is embodied in a formal document simultaneously entered into by both parties, and purporting to be a contract, little difficulty can occur as to whether the contract was concluded. PART III.

Ch. ii.
But where this is not the case questions have arisen.

§ 281. One question has been whether the instrument in question was the embodiment of a contract or of some other transaction. Is the instrument a contract?

(i.) Is a Judge's order made by consent, and directing certain things to be done by the parties to it, a contract to do the things? It has been said not to be by Lord Hatherley (when a Vice Chancellor), who, both on that ground and on the nature of the Judge's order, refused specific performance.¹ The opposite view has been taken in some cases at Common Law, and it has been said that a contract is not the less a contract, and subject to the incidents of a contract, because there is superadded the command of a Judge.² Judge's order.

(ii.) Are instructions for a settlement a contract for a settlement, or only instructions for a contract? This was a question on which the House of Lords was in one case much divided.³ Instructions for settlement.

(iii.) Are articles of association a contract between the company and a third person named in them? This is a question which, under special circumstances, has been answered in the affirmative.⁴ Articles of association.

(iv.) Is the recital in a deed evidence of a contract?—is a question which also has been answered in the affirmative.⁵ Recital.

§ 282. A much more common question is whether negotiations have passed from that state and resulted Negotiation is not contract.

in actual contract. If it were only doubtful whether the contract was concluded or negotiations still remained open, the Court of Chancery used to refuse specific performance, and leave the parties to their Common Law rights if any.¹

Proposal and acceptance.

§ 283. A binding contract, enforceable in Equity, may be constituted by the proposal of one party and the acceptance of the other.² But as the proposal has no validity without the acceptance, a memorandum of offer differs essentially from a memorandum of agreement. "In the case of an offer, no doubt, the party signing it may at any time before acceptance retract; but if it be an agreement, though signed by one party alone, he cannot retract at his pleasure, but all he can do is to call upon the other party to sign or rescind the agreement. A memorandum of agreement supposes that the two parties have verbally made an actual contract with each other; and when the terms of such contract are reduced into writing and signed, that is sufficient to bind the party signing; but if the memorandum is of an offer only, that assumes that there has been no actual contract between the parties."³

Essentials
of the acceptance.

§ 284. In order that an acceptance may be operative, it must be plain, unequivocal, unconditional, and without variance of any sort between it and the proposal, and it must be communicated to the other party, and that without unreasonable delay.⁴

v. Lee.

² The acceptance must be by the other party. An offer by A. to B. and acceptance by C. constitutes no contract. Meynell v. Surtees, 3 Sm. & Gif. 101, 117.

ance, is supported and illustrated by a great variety of decisions. PART III.
Ch. ii.

In the case of Kennedy v. Lee,¹ the subject was much discussed: it was there unsuccessfully argued that the acceptance introduced a term respecting the goodwill of a business not included in the proposal.

§ 286. The unequivocal character of the acceptance that is requisite is well illustrated by a case in which A. made an offer to B., by letter, to sell a lot of land: B. filed a bill against A., alleging a contract in writing for the sale of this estate, and the answer offered to sell the estate: the decree was in the alternative for a conveyance on the payment of the purchase-money into the bank, or in default for the dismissal of the bill: the money was paid. The question arose between the heirs and devisees of B. as to the time when the contract became binding: it was held that the bill did not amount to an acceptance so as to bind B.; for he as plaintiff might have dismissed his bill: the decree did not, for it left an election to the plaintiff: but the payment of the money into the bank did, for that was unequivocal.² In another case, where the plaintiff had made an offer to take a farm, and had referred to certain persons as to his capabilities and capital, and in consequence of this offer the agents of the proposed lessor had, by his direction, prepared and sent to the proposed lessee a lease which they considered to be in pursuance of the proposal; Kindersley V.C. held this not to be an acceptance,³ on the ground that the act was ambiguous and conditional:—ambiguous, because the lease might have been sent in order to save time, and without any intention of departing from the right of accepting or refusing the offer of the plaintiff, according to the result of his communication with the referees; and conditional, because the sending the draft lease, if an acceptance at all, was an acceptance upon condition that the defendant accepted the draft lease. The case of Thomas v. Blackman,¹ before Knight Bruce V.C., may also be referred to as illustrating this doctrine. Here there had been a long correspondence, and the Vice Chancellor held that there never had been, in any part of it, a clear accession on both sides to one and the same set of terms; and accordingly he decreed the dismissal of the bill, unless the plaintiff accepted the terms of the defendant's original offer, which the plaintiff acceded to.

Acceptance must be unconditional.

§ 287. In illustration of the unconditional nature of the acceptance required, the case of *Crossley v. Maycock*² may be referred to. There vendors wrote, in answer to an offer, "which offer we accept, and now hand you two copies of conditions of sale," and inclosed a form of contract containing sundry special stipulations; and it was held that the acceptance was conditional only. "If," said Jessel M.R.,³ "there is a simple acceptance of an offer to purchase, accompanied by a statement that the acceptor desires that the arrangement should be put into some more formal terms, the mere reference to such a proposal will not prevent the Court from enforcing the final agreement so arrived at. But if the agreement is made subject to certain conditions then specified or to be specified by the party making it, or by his solicitor, then, until those conditions are accepted, there is no final agreement such as the Court will enforce."

out variance from the offer.

§ 288. Where there is any variance between the terms of the proposal and those of the acceptance, no contract arises: as where A. offered to purchase a house on certain terms, possession to be given on or before the 25th of July, and B. agreed to the terms, and said he would give possession on the 1st of August.¹ And where A. made the promoters of a railway an offer of a way-leave for the purpose of their railway, which was one for mineral traffic only, and it was subsequently accepted, but for the purpose of constructing a public railway for general traffic, this was held to be such a variation in the subject-matter as prevented any contract from arising.²

PART III.
Ch. ii.

§ 289. The introduction of a term in the acceptance which is not in the proposal, is a variance which prevents their constituting a contract. Therefore, where the defendant offered certain terms for a lease, and the plaintiff accepted the terms and offered an under-lease, there was held to be no contract.³ So where a condition was introduced into the acceptance, it prevented its operating as a contract.⁴ In another case, where the plaintiff proposed a contract to the defendant, stipulating amongst other things that a lease should contain all the covenants in the superior lease, and the defendant signed the contract tendered, but with the qualification that there was nothing unusual in such superior lease: a draft of the proposed lease was then submitted to the defendant, who made some alterations, and requested the plaintiff's solicitors to adopt them at once, or to refuse the lease: the solicitors sent back the draft, acceding to all the alterations except one as to assigning without licence: it was held that at this stage there was no contract, and that the proposed lessee could determine the treaty.⁵ And where a proposal was made to take an allotment of railway shares, and a letter was returned, accepting the offer, but headed "not transferable," the new term introduced by these words prevented the proposal and acceptance from constituting a contract.¹

Acceptance subject to by solicitors.

§ 290. In a case which went to the House of Lords,² the Court of Appeal held that the purchaser's acceptance of a proposal for sale "subject to the title being approved by our solicitors," did not constitute a contract by reason of the new term; for all that the simple acceptance could have given here would have been the right to a good title, and what he stipulated for was a title to be approved by particular persons of his own selection. But in the House of Lords, though the decision of the Court of Appeal was affirmed (on the ground that no concluded contract had been established), Lord Cairns dissented from that Court's view of the effect of the words in question, and said,³ "I am disposed to look upon the words as meaning nothing more than a guard against its being supposed that the title was to be accepted without investigation, as meaning, in fact, the title must be investigated and approved of in the usual way, which would be by the solicitor of the purchaser." If the point be still open, it will be worthy of consideration whether the opinion of Lord Cairns can be maintained.

What is not a new term.

§ 291. But where the proposal leaves a term to be decided by the acceptance, the decision of this will not of course amount to the introduction of a new term; as e.g., where the proposal has reference to such a day as shall be named by the party to whom it is made, and he in accepting names the day.⁴ And a contract by proposal and acceptance may, like any other, leave the price or any other term to be ascertained in a way agreed on.¹

PART III.

§ 292. So again, it seems clear that a variation which is purely nugatory will not affect the contract;² nor will the introduction into the acceptance of what is not matter of contract; as, e.g., the words "we hope to give you possession at half-quarter day," which were held to be a mere expression of hope, and so not to introduce a new term into the acceptance.³

Nugatory
variations.

§ 293. Nor will the Court consider a new term to be introduced by the circumstance that the acceptance proceeds to treat of the way in which the contract is to be carried into execution; as, for instance, by referring to a formal contract that was to be drawn.⁴

Reference to mode of execution.

§ 294. Nor will a new term be held to be introduced by the mere grant of some indulgence by the acceptor to the proposer; as where the proposal involved the payment on a particular day, and the acceptance added that if the payment was not so made, interest at 10 per cent. must also be paid.⁵ It would seem that this could only apply where the time of payment would be of the essence of the contract, as in any other case it would seem that such a stipulation was not an indulgence.

Indulgence

ceptor.

§ 295. The acceptance must be communicated in some way by the accepting party to the other: a mere mental acceptance will not do. "The plea is not good," said Brian C.J., "without showing that he certified the other of his pleasure, for it is common learning that the intent of a man is not triable, for even the Devil does not know the intent of a man.”¹

§ 296. But upon this doctrine a remarkable exception has been engrafted by decision, viz., that where the communications are by post, the delivery of the acceptance to the post office makes a concluded and absolute contract, though it may never reach the hands of the other party. This conclusion has been based on various suggestions; as that the person making the offer has assented to treating the posting of the acceptance as a sufficient communication to him; that the post office is the agent of the proposer to receive the acceptance; that the balance of convenience is in favour of the doctrine; that the acceptor has done all that is requisite on his part, and is not answerable for the casualties of the post office; that the case is governed by analogy with the law as to notice of dishonour of a bill. Whether any of these suggested reasons are satisfactory is a question now open for discussion only in the House of Lords; for in the Household Fire Insurance Co. v. Grant,² the majority of the Court of Appeal upheld the conclusion above stated, Lord Bramwell dissenting in a vigorous judgment. The current of authorities before this decision cited in the note hereto was not uniform.³

Without
unreasonable delay.

§ 297. The acceptance, moreover, must be without unreasonable delay. “When I offer anything to a person,” said Lord Cranworth,⁴ “what I mean is, I will do that if you choose to assent to it; meaning, although it is not so expressed, if you choose to assent to it within a reasonable time." This principle is illustrated by the case of Williams v. Williams,¹ of which the circumstances were, that in 1827 A. wrote to B. that he had credited B.'s account with 220*l.* in consideration of a contract by B. to convey certain houses. The abstract was delivered; but there was no acceptance in writing by B., who however five years afterwards filed his bill against A. for specific performance. It appeared that in 1827 A. had abandoned the treaty, and that in 1829 both parties considered it as broken off, but nevertheless that B. had in the meantime had the benefit of the credit of 220*l.* The Court dismissed the bill, on the ground that an offer, to convert it into a contract, must be accepted and acted on within a reasonable space of time. In another case, A. applied to a company for shares on the 8th of June, and an allotment was made on the following 23rd of November, and it was held that the acceptance of the proposal to take shares came too late to bind the proposer.²

§ 298. The proposal, before conversion into a contract by acceptance, may be determined in two ways, by the withdrawal of the person making the offer, or by the refusal of the person to whom it is made.

What determines the proposal.

§ 299. First, it may be determined by the proposer by withdrawal before acceptance,³ because the proposal by itself creates no mutuality and no obligation; so that where a person made an offer for a farm, which the owner intended to accept, but did not do so bindingly, and the proposer subsequently withdrew his offer, it was held that he could do so, and that there was no contract.¹ And so also where A. by writing applied to a company for shares "which he thereby accepted" and paid the deposit, but before allotment withdrew his application and unsuccessfully required the return of his deposit, and an allotment was made to him, he was held not to be a contributory.² And where a railway company gave notice to treat for part of a manufactory, which was met by a counter notice requiring them to take the whole, and the company then gave notice of their intention to apply to the Board of Trade for the appointment of a surveyor to determine the value of the premises required by the notice to treat, and of the further lands which the owner could lawfully require, and had required the company to take, it was held that the company might still withdraw their notice to treat.³

§ 300. This right to retract is not affected by the fact that the offer itself specifies a time within which the acceptance is to be made; so that where A. offered to sell a house to B., and gave B. six weeks for a definite answer, A. was held entitled to withdraw his offer before the expiration of that period.⁴

Express

§ 301. It is necessary to the effectual determination of a proposal by withdrawal before acceptance that some notice of withdrawal or retraction should be given to or reach the person to whom the proposal was made, and the mere posting of a letter is not sufficient.⁵ But it is not needful that the notice should be formal or express.¹ "It may well be that the one man is bound in some way or other to let the other man know that his mind with regard to the offer has been changed;"² but as soon as the person to whom the offer was made in fact has this knowledge, as, for instance, by knowing that the proposer has sold the property to a third person, he will be taken to have sufficient notice of withdrawal, and he cannot afterwards by accepting the offer make a binding contract.¹

§ 302. Where however the communication is not a mere offer to contract but a notice given in pursuance of a right of pre-emption, the notice may, according to the terms of the instrument giving this pre-emption, be incapable of being withdrawn.³

Notice under right of pre-emption.

§ 303. In a recent case⁴ the Court of Appeal have held that an unauthorized acceptance by a stranger in the name of the person to whom a proposal is made prevents the person making the proposal from withdrawing it. The case appears to be a remarkable one; and it raises such important questions with regard to the true nature of a contract that some observations are made upon it in an additional note at the end of this volume, to which the reader is referred.

Unauthorized acceptance prevents withdrawal.

It has been held that the doctrine of the case above discussed does not apply where the ratification does not come till after the time fixed by the contract for performance has arrived.⁵

and it will not be revived by a subsequent tender of acceptance.¹

§ 305. As it is competent to the proposer to recall his proposal at any time before acceptance, so also he may vary it by the introduction of any new term into it. And as the person to whom the proposal is made may of course offer to accept the terms proposed with any variation or addition, it follows that each party may continue to add fresh stipulations to the proposed contract, until the terms proposed by one side have been definitely accepted by the other.² Therefore where the owner of an estate made a proposal requiring amongst other things the payment of 1,500*l.* by way of deposit, and the purchaser objected to it, and before he accepted the terms, the owner required it to be paid and the contract to be signed before a given day, or the treaty to be at an end, and this was not complied with, but a subsequent offer was made to sign the contract and pay the deposit; the Court held that there was no contract.³

Writing

§ 306. The Statute of Frauds requiring that the memorandum of agreement shall be signed by the party to be charged therewith and not requiring the signature of both parties, it follows that where there is a writing under the hand of the defendant expressing the contract, there is no need to prove an acceptance in writing by the plaintiff of the terms of that contract, and the institution of the action is a sufficient acceptance.⁴ If that writing leaves any term open to the election of the other party, the acceptance must of course be in writing to satisfy the statute.⁵

¹ Hyde v. Wrench, 3 Beav. 334. The decision in Hodgson v. Hutchenson, 5 Vin. Abr. 522, pl. 34, which inferred an acceptance from acts after an explicit refusal, probably cannot be maintained on this point.

§ 307. But the cases have gone further, and it is now well settled that where the writing is a memorandum expressing not a contract but a mere proposal, yet there the acceptance of this proposal (though it seems essential to convert the proposal into a contract) need not be in writing.

PART III.
Ch. ii.

Plaintiff's acceptance need not be in writing.

This was so decided by Kindersley V.C., in a case where he observed on the want of previous authority distinctly to establish the point,¹ and his decision was subsequently followed by the Courts of Exchequer and Exchequer Chamber.² In the old case of Coleman v. Upcot,³ where there was first an acceptance by the plaintiff by parol, and subsequently a subscription by the plaintiff, the parol acceptance appears to have been the ground of the decision that there was a binding contract.

§ 308. When it has been once established that the acceptance need not be in writing, it of course follows that it may be by acts as well as words.⁴ Thus, for example, where an uncle of a young man sent proposals to the friends of a lady, to which no answer was returned, but the young man was admitted as a suitor, and the marriage ensued, it was held by Lord Nottingham to amount to a complete contract, which ought to be performed on all sides.⁵ It is an every-day occurrence to infer assent from acts as well as from words.

§ 309. Of course no action can be brought against any one on a parol acceptance of a proposal relative to the sale of realty.

Defendant's acceptance

§ 310. In contracts constituted by proposal and acceptance, it is obvious that the question may arise, at

§ 311. In case of there being an agent for the proposer authorized in that behalf, the communication of the acceptance to him completes the contract, though the agent may fail to make known the acceptance to his principal.³

Representation and conduct.

§ 312. One species of contract by proposal and acceptance is constituted by a promise or representation made by one person, and acts done by another person on the faith of such promise or representation. "A representation," said Lord Cottenham,⁴ "made by one party for the purpose of influencing the conduct of the other party, and acted on by him, will in general be sufficient to entitle him to the assistance of this Court for the purpose of realizing such representation."

Representation of things past.

§ 313. Representations are of two kinds: the one of things past or present, the other of things future: the one of things done or existing, the other of things to be done. With regard to the former class, whenever a representation as to something alleged as a then existing fact, which representation is not true, has been made by a person who knows it to be untrue, or does not know it to be true,⁵ to another person in order to induce him to an act, and that act has been thereupon done by the second person to his prejudice, the person making the representation will not be allowed by the Court afterwards to turn round and deny the alleged fact. "It shall be," said Lord Mansfield C.J.,¹ "as represented to be." Thus for example, where one person represented to another, on a treaty for marriage with his daughter, that a certain demand was not existing, he was afterwards restrained by the Court from proceeding to recover the demand:² and where a father represented to a future husband of his daughter that she was entitled after the death of her parents to 10,000*l.*, and she was in fact only entitled to about half that amount, the balance was recovered from the father's estate.³ But in these cases, the Court acts merely on the principle of preventing fraud, and not at all on contract;⁴ and they therefore do not properly come in for discussion here.

§ 314. But with regard to representations of something future, and within the power of the party making the statement, the case is different. On the one hand, the doctrine of estoppel by representation has no application to such cases;⁵ and on the other hand such a representation, made for a particular purpose by one person, and followed by conduct in pursuance of it by the other, constitutes a true and proper contract. "There is no middle term," said Lord Cranworth,⁶ "no tertium quid between a representation so made to be effective for such a purpose and a contract; they are identical." In one case an uncle represented that he would buy a warehouse for his nephew, and at the uncle's instance the nephew entered into a binding contract to purchase the warehouse: it was there held that the uncle's estate was bound to find the purchase-money.¹

tation must be clear and absolute.

§ 315. In order to enable the Court to give relief on the ground of contract to a person who has acted on the faith of another's statements, the representation or promise on which he relies must be clear and absolute. Therefore where a father, after declining to enter into a settlement, added that he should allow his daughter the interest of 2,000*l.*, and that if she married he might bind himself to do it, and pay the principal at his decease, it was held not to be an absolute contract:² and so where the father of an intended husband made only a promise to recognise his son in common with the rest of his family, but the promise was loose and vague, and defined no sum, Stuart V.C. dismissed a bill filed by the son, but under the circumstances directed the costs to be paid out of the father's estate.³ But, on the other hand, where on the treaty for a marriage the father of the intended wife wrote to the intended husband, "At my decease she [the intended wife] shall be entitled to her share in whatever property I may die possessed of," Lord Romilly M.R. held that this amounted to a contract binding on the father and his estate, and was not too vague to be enforced.⁴ "When," said his Lordship,⁵ "a man makes a solemn engagement upon an important occasion, such as the marriage of his daughter, he is bound by the promise he then makes. If he induce a person to act upon a particular promise with a particular view which affects the interests in life of his own children and of the persons who become united to them, this Court will not permit him afterwards to forego his own words, and say that he was not bound by what he then promised. It is upon these principles that the Court has acted in all such cases; it exercises its jurisdiction for the enforcement of the truth, and makes a man's acts square with his words, by compelling him to perform what he has undertaken."

PART III.
Ch. ii.

§ 316. Where the representation is merely of what the person intends to do, or the promise is one for the performance of which the person making it refuses to contract, and insists that the recipient shall rely on his honour, the engagement is of a merely honorary nature, and therefore not enforceable by the Court.¹ In one case the guardians of a young lady, who was a minor, objected to her marriage until a suitable settlement should be made on behalf of her intended husband; his uncle, from whom he had expectations, having been previously consulted on the matter, was informed of this resolution; in reply to which he wrote to his nephew, "My sentiments respecting you continue unalterable: however, I shall never settle any part of my property out of my power so long as I exist. My will has been made for some time, and I am confident that I shall never alter it to your disadvantage. I repeat that my Tipperary estate will come to you at my death, unless some unforeseen occurrence should take place." The letter further alleged that, as he had never settled anything on any of his nephews, his doing so in this case would cause jealousy in the family: this letter the writer desired might be communicated to the young lady's guardians. It was held that the intention of the uncle was not to settle his property, and that therefore the letter could not be treated as a contract.¹

§ 317. The same principle governed the decision of the case of Money v. Jordan.² The facts of the case were, shortly, that B. was under a bond for the payment of a sum of money to A.; that B. being about to marry, A. said she should never distress him about the bond, that she had given it up, and would never enforce it; but on being requested to give up the bond, she declined to do so, saying that she would be trusted, and that B. might rely on her word. B. married, and A. subsequently having put the bond in suit, B. sought the interference of the Court by injunction. The representations in question were held to be binding by Lord Romilly M.R. in the first instance, by Knight Bruce L.J. on appeal, and by Lord St. Leonards in the House of Lords, whilst the contrary was ultimately decided by a majority in the House, consisting of Lords Cranworth and Brougham. The question was in a considerable part one of evidence. But Lords Cranworth and St. Leonards differed as to the effect of a representation of intention, the latter holding such to be binding, and the former not.³

tions.

§ 318. On the same principle, where a settlement was not ready at the time of the marriage, and the lady married on the husband's engagement in honour that she should have the same advantage of the agreement as if it were in writing and duly executed, the Court refused to interfere, as the engagement was merely honorary.¹ And again where letters were sent containing what only amounted to a general assurance that, if a tenant acted to the satisfaction of his landlord, he would deal honourably and handsomely with him in regard to renewing his lease, this assurance was discriminated from a matter of contract, and was not enforced by the Court.²

§ 319. The circumstances of the case of *Morehouse v. Colvin*³ were these. A testator, who had by his will bequeathed 12,500*l.* to his daughter, wrote a letter to an old friend of his in India, to whom the young lady was consigned, and therein stated that, in case of her marrying with his approbation, her husband should have 2,000*l.* on the marriage, and continued, "nor will that be all: she is and shall be noticed in my will; but to what further amount I cannot precisely say, owing to the present reduced and reducing state of interest, which puts it out of my power to determine at present what I may have to dispose of." The substance of these terms was communicated to the intended husband: the testator revoked his will, and made another, omitting the legacy, and giving his daughter a residuary and contingent interest: Lord Romilly M.R., and afterwards the Court of Appeal in Chancery, held that there was no contract which could be enforced.

The House of Lords held the case was one of conduct induced by promises and not of definite contract; that there was no contract on her part to remain with her master, and that he was at liberty to have dismissed her at any time.

Subsequent set-silent as to promise.

§ 321. Where, subsequently to representations of the sort which we have been considering, a settlement has been executed making a provision but taking no notice of the subject of the representations, a presumption arises that the settlement contains the whole contract, and this, if not rebutted, is of course a bar to any relief on the representations.¹

Where the promise did not induce the marriage.

§ 322. The same result more clearly follows where not only is there a settlement which is silent as to the promise, but where it appears that the marriage was determined on long before the promise. There it is evident that the promise did not induce the marriage.²

Cases
where representation binding.

§ 323. We will now proceed to consider the cases in which a representation, followed by conduct of the party to whom it is made, has been held to be binding.

In cases of
contracts.

§ 324. These cases have for the most part turned upon representations made in the course of marriage treaties, followed by marriage made on the faith of such representations,—a class of cases in which the Court is inclined to attach more than ordinary weight to the language of the one party, when it is calculated to convey a false impression to the other.³

Distinction be-

and verbal

§ 325. Where the proposal is in writing, the marriage and other acts are relied on only as evidence of acceptance; but where the proposal has been verbal, the acts must be relied on also as constituting a case of part-performance, for which purpose marriage alone is, from the words of the Statute of Frauds, not sufficient. The cases on part-performance in connection with such contracts,¹ and also of marriage in fraud of a parol contract,² are respectively considered elsewhere.

PART III.
Ch. ii.

§ 326. The principle of the cases now under discussion is established by several old decisions, to which it will be sufficient to refer³ before considering the more recent cases.

The principle long established.

§ 327. In Luders v. Anstey,⁴ a husband before marriage wrote a letter proposing a settlement of the lady's fortune, securing certain benefits to the children of the lady's first marriage: shortly afterwards the marriage took place, and Lord Loughborough held that the husband was bound by the letter, though bonds to execute a settlement had subsequently been entered into, also securing benefits, but different ones, to the same children. "There is no locus poenitentiae," said his Lordship, "in this case; and I should require a positive distinct dissent: and that could not be evidenced by anything but an actual settlement before marriage, varying from that."

Luders v. Anstey.

§ 328. In Saunders v. Cramer,⁵ a paper signed by a lady, expressing her intention of leaving her granddaughter a certain sum, to be secured by a bond, which offer was to be, and was in fact communicated to the intended husband of the young lady, and was followed by a marriage, was held a binding proposal. The mention of the bond went to show that it was intended to be binding on the party making it.

De Beil v.
Thomson.

§ 329. In De Beil v. Thomson,¹ in written proposals made on the marriage treaty the father expressed that he “intended to leave his daughter a further sum of 10,000*l.* in his will, to be settled on her and her children, the disposition of which, supposing she had no children, to be prescribed by the will of her father.” This was held to create an obligation. These proposals were made subject to revision; but it was held that that power was determined by their acceptance by the intended husband, and the marriage with the father’s consent. This decision of Lord Langdale M.R. was affirmed by Lord Cottenham,² and afterwards by the House of Lords.³

Montgomery v.
Reilly.

§ 330. In Montgomery v. Reilly,⁴ the eldest son came into estates, subject to a jointure to his mother and portions to his brothers and sisters, and carried on a correspondence with a friend of the family with a view to the increase of these charges, and ordered the payment of the increased jointure and interest on the increased portions: on the faith of a representation made on the strength of these acts by the family friend, a daughter married: the interest on the increased portion was continued to be paid to the daughter, and the agent’s accounts in which these payments were stated passed; and the eldest son took possession of some property under the arrangement with his brothers and sisters, to which he would not otherwise have been entitled. The House of Lords decided that there was a contract binding on the eldest brother, and specifically enforced it.

conclusion that previously to and in contemplation of the marriage of the plaintiff's father and mother, the natural father of the lady had represented to the intended husband and to other persons that a certain estate of his in Scotland and a sum of 105,000 sicca rupees were settled by him as a provision for his daughter and her children, and that the marriage was contracted in a confidence in that representation. It was part of the defendant's case that at the date of the marriage there was an existing testamentary settlement of the property in question in favour of the lady: but the Court held that such an instrument if it existed was made irrevocable by the representations of the father: and it gave the plaintiff relief on the ground of the representation made.

And in a later case the same Judge (Stuart V.C.) held that a gift made by a codicil in pursuance of a promise by an uncle to his niece, on the faith of which she altered her position in life and continued to act as his caretaker, became irrevocable by force of the promise and conduct.¹ But this case has been overruled by the case of Maddison v. Alderson.²

Loffus v. Maw.

In *Coverdale v. Eastwood*³ the contract was contained in letters, and the only serious question was one of construction.

Coverdale v. Eastwood.

§ 332. The representations need not be made by the persons most immediately interested in the marriage treaty. In one case a legatee on his marriage assigned part of his legacy to the trustees of his settlement, and covenanted to pay the amount by instalments. It was proved that the marriage was contracted, and the settlement made, on the faith of representations by the executor that the legacy was substantial and safe and would be paid though at a future time. sufficient to pay the legacies, it was held that, by force of the representations, the estate of the executor was liable for the amount of the legacy.¹

Stratton.*

§ 333. The doctrine in question seems to have been carried to its fullest limits in the case of Piggott v. Stratton.² The defendant Stratton was lessee for a long term of plots A, B, and C. The lease contained a covenant that any new houses should be detached and separated from one another by an open space of not less than thirty feet. Plot C lay between B and the sea. The defendant Harbour, under whom the plaintiff claimed as assign, negotiated with Stratton for an under-lease of part of B, and Stratton in answer to a question stated that he could not build closer than thirty feet because the lease forbade him, and Harbour swore that thereupon he was induced to take the land, and further that in order to satisfy himself he asked for and was shown a draft of the lease. An under-lease was executed containing covenants referring to the original lease. The original lease was surrendered, and a new lease granted with different covenants, and Stratton the lessee proposed to build so as not to leave the thirty feet space. Lord Hatherley (then Wood V.C.) held that the covenants in the under-lease did not restrain this conduct, but that the representation did. He held it equivalent to a representation that the lease was an instrument by which the property was secured to the purchaser in a course of enjoyment, and that to permit him to alter that course would be to permit him to derogate from his own grant. Lord Campbell and Turner L.J. held that the defendant was bound both by his covenants in his under-lease and by his representation. Knight Bruce L.J. held that he was bound by his covenants, but declined to give any opinion on the other point. It will not escape notice that in this case the only representation made was one of an existing fact, viz., the existence of the lease, that there was no statement that the state of things should continue, or that the lease should not be surrendered or allowed to drop, and that to infer from the existence of a lease that it should never be surrendered, seems, in the absence of express contract, a somewhat strong inference. The case is, however, one of the highest authority.

CHAPTER III.

OF THE INCOMPLETENESS OF THE CONTRACT.

PART III.
Ch. iii.

Contract must be certain, fair, and just.

§ 334. "NOTHING is more established in this Court," said Lord Hardwicke,¹ speaking of contracts which the Court will enforce, "than that every agreement of this kind ought to be certain, fair, and just in all its parts. If any of those ingredients are wanting in the case, this Court will not decree a specific performance." "I lay it down as a general proposition," said Lord Rosslyn,² "to which I know no limitation, that all agreements, in order to be executed in this Court, must be certain and defined: secondly, they must be equal and fair; for this Court, unless they are fair, will not execute them: and thirdly, they must be proved in such manner as the law requires."

Where
part-performance.

§ 335. In regard to objections founded on the want of any of these qualities in the contract, or on the incapacity of the Court to perform the contract, or its illegality, the Court is, from obvious motives of justice, somewhat unwilling to entertain the objection, when it is made after part-performance, from which the defendant has derived benefits, and the plaintiff cannot be fully recompensed except by the performance of the contract in specie.³ When a contract has been partly executed by possession having been taken under it, the Court, it has been said, "will strain its power to enforce a complete performance."¹

PART III.
Ch. iii.

§ 336. The qualities of completeness, certainty, and fairness, which will be now considered, will in great part be best explained by showing cases in which they have been considered as being wanting. The qualities of completeness and certainty are not perhaps truly separable: but under the former those cases will be rather considered where there is the absolute want of some term in the contract; under the latter head of certainty, those where it is not the entire want of the term, but the want of sufficient exactitude in it, which has furnished a defence to a specific performance.²

Completeness, fairness, and certainty, how to be explained.

§ 337. It is evident that incompleteness may be in the contract itself—in which case there is properly speaking no contract, or in the evidence—in which case there is no sufficient memorandum. But nevertheless it seems not inconvenient to consider these defects together.

Incompleteness may be in contract or evidence.

§ 338. The time at which the completeness of the contract is to be ascertained was the filing of the bill, and is now the commencement of the action: so that it was not sufficient for the purpose of obtaining an immediate decree, to prove that the consent of a tenant for life, which was essential to the contract, was given before the hearing.³ It is an obvious principle of justice, that the adoption of a contract by a third party shall not so relate back as to subject a party to legal proceedings in respect of its non-performance, the non-performance having at the time been justifiable.⁴

Completeness to be ascertained at commencement of proceedings.

defendant,

§ 339. To this principle there are some exceptions, or apparent exceptions, which it is well briefly to notice. When the contract is incomplete through the default of the defendant, and the incompleteness is one which can be remedied, the Court will not refuse its aid: thus, where a contract had been entered into for granting an annuity for three lives to be named, and the consideration had been paid, but through the defendant's refusing to proceed the lives had not been named, the plaintiff was allowed to perfect his contract by nominating three lives who were in being at the time of the contract.¹ So where the defendant agreed to build a house on the plaintiff's land and the plaintiff agreed thereupon to grant a lease which the defendant agreed to accept; and the defendant pulled down the old house but neglected to build the new one: the Court held that the contract to accept a lease gave it jurisdiction, that damages could be awarded under Lord Cairns' Act for the non-performance of the contract to build, and that this condition being thus satisfied the plaintiff could have performance of the defendant's contract to accept a lease.² itself.

§ 340. An action may be maintained on a contract where, though some term be not ascertained, the Court has the means of ascertaining it, on the principle of the maxim id certum est quod certum reddi potest. Thus, in a contract for the sale of lands under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, in which the sum was not ascertained, the Court decreed the defendants to issue their warrant to the Sheriff to summon a jury to settle the compensation:³ and the same principle is illustrated by the cases on the requisite completeness as to subject-matter and price.¹

PART III.
Ch. iii.

§ 341. The necessary completeness of the contract may be considered in respect of (i.) the subject-matter, (ii.) the parties to the contract, (iii.) the price, and (iv.) the other terms.

Completeness to be considered.

§ 342. (i.) Every valid contract must contain a description of the subject-matter: but it is not necessary that it should be so described as to admit of no doubt what it is: for the identity of the actual thing and the thing described may be shown by extrinsic evidence. This flows from the very necessity of the case; for all actual things, except the contract itself, being outside of and beyond the contract, the connection between the words expressing the contract and things outside it must be established by something other than the contract itself, that is, by extrinsic evidence: the same rule is admitted, and from the like necessity, with regard both to persons and things mentioned in wills;² and in the cases of contracts within both the fourth and the seventeenth sections of the Statute of Frauds, parol evidence as to identity is admissible.³ Thus, for instance, the expression "Mr. Ogilvie's house" was held sufficient, and extrinsic evidence was admitted to show what house it referred to.⁴ In another case a subject-matter described as "the mill property including cottages in Esher village" was held capable of identification by parol evidence.⁵ The expressions "this place"⁶ and "the lease"⁷ have been held sufficient descriptions of the thing sold: and "your word" has been explained by parol evidence of a previous conversation.¹ So where a contract referred to another writing, parol evidence of the identity of a certain writing with that referred to was admitted;² and in another case parol evidence was admitted to show the meaning of "50% more of premium," and of "the profit rent of the present tenant."³ A general description of the subject-matter is sufficient, as e.g. "the Bank End estate," although the contract itself may provide for the parcels being subsequently defined.⁴

Pleading.

§ 343. Where it is necessary to call in extrinsic evidence, the connection of the subject-matter of the contract, and the thing in respect of which specific performance is sought, must be pleaded and supported by sufficient evidence.⁵

What definiteness required.

§ 344. It is, however, essential that the description of the subject-matter should be so definite, as that it may be known with certainty what the purchaser imagined himself to be contracting for,⁶ and that the Court may be able to ascertain what it is.⁷ And so in a case where there was a contract for the letting of "coals, etc.," the statement of the subject-matter was thought by Knight Bruce L.J. insufficient, and specific performance was refused on that amongst other grounds.⁸

Where subject-matter ascertainable though not ascertained.

§ 345. With regard to the description of the subject-matter, the maxim id certum est quod certum reddi potest applies. Thus, where the memorandum of the contract contained no specific description of the property sold, but referred to the deeds as being in the possession of a person named, the Court thought that the property might easily be ascertained before the Master, and held the description of the subject-matter sufficient.¹ And again, a contract to sell an estate within certain ascertained boundaries, described as partly freehold, and partly leasehold, is not void for uncertainty, because it is a good contract to sell the vendor's interest in the property ; but the purchaser is entitled to have it reduced to certainty by the boundary of the properties of different tenures being ascertained, or shown to be capable of being so.² In one case the contract described the property as half an acre of the land as agreed on. The land had previously been paced out in the purchaser's presence, and the description was held sufficient.³

PART III.
Ch. iii.

§ 346. So the uncertainty of description of the subject-matter may be got over by the election of one party to the contract, where the effect of the contract is to give such a right of election. Thus, where a contract was made by the defendant to sell to the plaintiff for the purpose of a churchyard so much land as was necessary on the north side of the church, and the plaintiff obtained the sanction of the proper authorities to the consecration of three-quarters of an acre of land adjoining the north side of the existing inclosure of the church and applied to the defendant to convey, it was held that the plaintiff being the person to do the first act under the contract had a right of election, and that if otherwise there was uncertainty of description he had sufficiently ascertained the land to be conveyed.⁴ A similar decision was pronounced in a case where the difficulty arose on a contract to let a glebe "except thirty-seven acres," and it was held that the right of election was with the lessee as the person who had the first act to do.¹ With these cases may be compared the cases on executory contracts for the sale of goods not specified, where the appropriation by the party entitled to elect converts the executory contract into an actual sale and passes the property to the vendee.²

ii. As to the parties.

§ 347. (ii.) The contracting parties must appear in the contract, or the memorandum of it, in order to constitute a binding contract:³ but they may so appear either by name or by description or by reference sufficient to ascertain their identity.⁴ Where the defendant made a written offer to take a lease, beginning "Sir," but without address, and the plaintiff's agent wrote an acceptance, but there was no document signed by the defendant showing the intended lessee's name, it was held that there was no written contract.⁵

Description instead of name.

§ 348. The contracting parties may be indicated by description instead of by name, provided the description is sufficient to preclude any fair dispute as to the identity;⁴ or, in other words, is certain within the legal maxim, id certum est quod certum reddi potest;⁶ and provided this description is not by reference, but to the contract itself. "It is scarcely possible," said Lord Romilly M.R.,⁷ "to look at an auction list without seeing property sold by a mortgagee, or by executors, or by trustees, without the name being disclosed and bought by somebody whose name is not given until the conveyance is prepared. It is the ordinary practice.”

PART III.
Ch. iii.

§ 349. “Your Lordships,” said Earl Cairns, addressing the House of Lords, “have frequently seen conditions of sale not merely by auction but by private contract, in which it is stated that the sale is made, sometimes by the owners, and sometimes by the mortgagees, and a form of contract is annexed in which an agent signs for the vendors, and no other specification upon the vendors’ part is inserted, and I never heard up to this time that a contract under those circumstances was invalid. In point of fact, my Lords, the question is, is there that certainty which is described in the legal maxim id certum est quod certum reddi potest. If I enter into a contract on behalf of my client, on behalf of my principal, on behalf of my friend, on behalf of those whom it may concern, in all those cases there is no such statement, and I apprehend that in none of those cases would the note satisfy the requirements of the Statute of Frauds. But if I, being really an agent, enter into a contract to sell Blackacre, of which I am not proprietor, or to sell the house No. 1, Portland Place, on behalf of the owner of that house, there, I apprehend, is a statement of matter of fact, as to which there can be perfect certainty, and none of the dangers struck at by the Statute of Frauds can arise.”¹

Lord Cairns’ statement of the law.

§ 350. In one case already referred to,² the sale was stated to be by direction of the executors of Admiral F., and, in another,³ the vendor was stated to be a trustee selling under a trust for sale; and in each case the description was held sufficient. proprietor, that was held to be a sufficient description.¹ In another case, where property was sold by ten persons incorporated, who worked the property in the name of a company, it was held that the description "the vendors" was enough, because it appeared from the conditions of sale and memorandum of the contract, that the vendors were in possession, that the abstract would be an abstract of the company's title, and that it was the interest of the company which was being sold.² In one case the signature of A. B. on the paper bearing the name of A. B.'s firm was held a sufficient description of that firm.³

Description held insufficient.

§ 351. But where the contract did not disclose the vendor's name, but stated the auctioneer's name, and the auctioneer signed the contract as confirming it "on behalf of the vendor," the memorandum was held insufficient, because the question who sold the estate (i. e., the question of the contract) was left to be decided by parol evidence.⁴

§ 352. When the conditions described the person selling as "the vendor," and named A. B. as "the vendor's solicitor," and A. B. was the beneficial owner (and was so known to the purchaser at the time of the contract), the description was insufficient:⁵ so was the description of the vendor as "landlord."⁶

iii. As to price.

§ 353. (iii.) In all sales it is evident that price is an essential ingredient, and that where this is neither ascertained nor rendered ascertainable, the contract is void for incompleteness, and incapable of enforcement.⁷

⁷ Elmore v. Kingscote, 5 B. & C. 583; Goodman v. Griffiths, 1 H. & N. 574. Consider Langstaff v. Nicholson, 25 Beav. 160.

Accordingly where A. agreed to sell an estate to B. for 1,500*l.* less than any other purchaser would give, the contract was held void; for if the estate was not to be sold to any other purchaser than B., it was impossible to know what such a purchaser would give for it.¹ So again where there was a contract to sell at a price to be fixed by two surveyors, and they made their valuation, but that did not sufficiently and finally ascertain the price, specific performance was refused:² and the like was the result of a similar case, where the valuation was such as the Court could not act on, by reason of circumstances of great impropriety on the part of one of the valuers, and the valuation being based on an erroneous view of the facts.³

PART III.
Ch. iii.

Cases where not ascertained.

§ 354. It is not, however, necessary that the contract should in the first instance determine the price.⁴ It may either appoint a way in which it is to be determined, or it may stipulate for a fair price.

Contract
need not precisely determine the price.

§ 355. Where the contract appoints a way of determining the price, the Courts have in some cases deemed that way essential: in other cases they have deemed it non-essential, and have treated the contract as essentially one to sell at a fair price. In all cases where the principal subject of the contract is to be valued in a specified manner, the manner has, it is believed, been held essential:⁵ the manner has often been held non-essential where it is applied only to an incident to the main subject, as timber to land, fixtures to a house, or plant to a business.

conditional till the ascertainment, and is absolute only when the price has been determined in the manner agreed upon.¹ In case of default in this respect the contract remains imperfect, and incapable of being enforced: for the Court will never direct the payment of such a sum as A. may fix.²

Ascertainment by valuers to be named.

§ 357. If the contract be between A. and B. to sell and buy at such a price as valuers to be named by them shall fix, it seems that either A. or B. may refuse to name a valuer, and the contract will remain incapable of completion without any liability on the part of the refusing party.³ But if the contract between A. and B. be to sell and buy at such a price as C. shall fix, neither A. nor B. can rightfully prevent C.'s determination and the completion of the contract: and it is presumed that an action might be maintained for such prevention.⁴ "Actus inceptus," says one of Lord Bacon's maxims,⁵ "cujus perfectio pendet ex voluntate partium, revocari potest: si autem pendet ex voluntate tertiæ personæ vel ex contingenti, non potest." One of his illustrations is this: "If I contract with you for cloth at such a price as J. S. shall name, then if J. S. refuse to name, the contract is voyd, but the parties cannot discharge it, because they have put it in the power of the third person to perfect."⁶ sale: Labeo and Cassius denied it.¹ “Sed nostra decisio,” says Justinian, after adverting to the doubts of the ancients, “ita hoc constituit, ut quotiens sic composita sit venditio quanti ille æstimaverit, sub hac condicione staret contractus ut, si quidem ipse qui nominatus est pretium definierit, omnimodo secundum ejus æstimationem et pretium persolvatur et res tradatur, ut venditio ad effectum perducatur, emptore quidem ex empto actione, venditore autem ex vendito agente. Sin autem ille qui nominatus est vel noluerit vel non potuerit pretium definire, tunc pro nihilo esse venditionem, quasi nullo pretio statuto.”² The principle thus established by Justinian is embodied in the French Law,³ and has found its way into our jurisprudence.

PART III.
Ch. iii.

§ 359. The persons nominated to value are sometimes though inaccurately spoken of as arbitrators. Arbitrators are appointed to settle a pre-existing dispute: valuers to ascertain the value of the subject-matter of the sale. It follows that the provisions of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 124, s. 12), are not applicable to valuers named in a contract.⁴

Valuers are not arbitrators.

§ 360. Of the first class of cases, viz., those in which the contract provides the mode of ascertaining the price, and this provision is an essential term, *Milnes v. Gery*⁵ may be considered as the leading case. There was there a contract that land should be sold at a price to be fixed by one valuer appointed on each side, or their umpire: the valuers could not agree; and Grant M.R. held the contract to be incomplete, and that the Court could not supply the defect by appointing other persons as valuers, which would be to execute a contract different from that of the parties;

although, where it is merely a contract to sell at a fair price, that is a matter which the Court can ascertain. "A man," said Leach V.C.,¹ "who agreed to sell at a price to be named by A., B., and C., could not be compelled by a Court of Equity to sell at any other price." This principle has governed the decision of several other cases of specific performance,² and may further be illustrated by the cases at Common Law.³

Difficulty occasioned by defendant's default.

§ 361. The difficulty has in several cases prevailed, notwithstanding the fact that the obstacle has arisen from the defendant's default. Thus, where the contract was to sell at a price to be fixed by arbitrators, but, in consequence of the defendant having refused to execute the arbitration-bond, it was uncertain whether any award would be made, the Court refused to proceed:⁴ and the same result followed where the refusal of one of the valuers to proceed appeared to arise from the information given to him by the defendant, of his intention not to complete.⁵ But where a vendor had agreed to sell a public-house for £10,700, and the furniture and fixtures in it at a fair valuation to be made by L., and after L. had commenced taking the inventory, the vendor refused to allow him to complete it, Jessel M.R., on an interlocutory application, made an order that L. be permitted to enter the premises for the purpose of completing the valuation.⁶ In a case where the price was to be ascertained by one of two alternative modes, and no election had been made as to the mode of ascertainment, the Court held that no contract had been constituted.¹

§ 362. In a case between a landowner and a railway company, a contract had been entered into under which the company was to do certain works. By a subsequent contract an estimate of the cost of completing the works was to be made by the company's engineer and submitted to A., the landowner's agent, "for approval:" in case of difference the amount was to be determined by B.: the amount "when agreed or determined" was to be paid to the landowner by the company in discharge of their obligations as to the works. A. died before approving any estimate. B. was living: it was held that by A.'s death the contract became incapable of enforcement.²

Firth v. Midland Railway Co.

§ 363. Again, where a railway company contracted for the purchase of land with a charitable corporation who had no power to sell except under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, and the price had not been ascertained by surveyor's certificate pursuant to the provisions of that Act, the Court held that no final contract had been arrived at.³ It may here be noticed that, when once the price has been fixed pursuant to the Act, the purchasing corporation is compellable to complete the purchase.⁴

§ 364. Court will have recourse to some other means of coming at the fair price and of thus carrying into effect the contract in its essential parts. As already remarked, these cases are principally of the valuation of incidental matters and not of the principal subject-matter of the contract.

The distinction between the two classes of cases illustrated.

§ 365. Grant M.R. not only indicated, in his judgment in Milnes v. Gery,¹ the distinction of the two classes of cases, but in two other cases before him acted upon it. In the earlier, in consequence of the lunacy of the vendor, the valuers could not be nominated; but the Master of the Rolls did not consider this an insurmountable difficulty, saying that, "if there was a valid and binding contract, the supervening incapacity of one party cannot deprive the other of the benefit;" and he accordingly directed an issue as to the lunacy, as a preliminary step in the cause.² In the other case, there was a contract to grant a lease, to contain such conditions as A. B. should think reasonable and proper; and his Honour referred it to the Master to settle the lease, and not to A. B.,—considering the agency of A. B. not to be of the essence of the contract, and that the Court having determined that the agreement as it stood was binding and conclusive, it would not require foreign aid. The objection to A. B.'s selling the lease might, it was said, have lain in the mouth of the defendant, but could not lie in the mouth of the plaintiff.³

§ 366. Again, in a case before Stuart V.C. where there was a contract to sell land and bleachworks at a sum fixed, and the plant and machinery to be taken at a value to be ascertained by valuers to be appointed by the parties, it was held that this was a subsidiary stipulation only, and that it did not form an obstacle to specific performance, which was accordingly decreed with costs.¹ The same view was taken both by Stuart V.C. and on appeal by Lord Hatherley in a case where the main subject of the contract was the sale of an estate for 24,000*l.*, and a provision was inserted for the valuation of certain furniture and articles:² and in another case where a partnership contract contained a provision for a valuation at its expiration, which fell through from their being no provision as to an umpire, the Court ascertained the value.³ The main object of the contract there was the partnership: the defendant had had the benefit of that contract, and could not be allowed to escape from the subsidiary contract as to sale on the ground of the difficulty as to the valuation.

PART III.
Ch. iii.

§ 367. In another case before Stuart V.C. he remarked that, where possession is referable to a contract to give a fair consideration, the amount of which has not been settled, the Court will, in favour of possession and expenditure referable to this contract, endeavour by every means within the legitimate bounds of its jurisdiction to ascertain the amount of the consideration.⁴

Meynell v. Surtees.

§ 368. (iv.) It is of course essential to the completeness of the contract, and it should express not only the names of the parties, the subject-matter, and the price, but all the other material terms. which must of course be determined by a consideration of each contract separately. It may, however, be laid down that the Court will carry into effect a contract framed in general terms, where the law will supply the details;¹ but if any details are to be supplied in modes which cannot be adopted by the Court, there is then no concluded contract capable of being enforced.² complete.

§ 369. Though it may be impossible to define what is the necessary completeness in the terms of a contract, it is easy to give instances in which contracts have been held insufficient in this respect. Such was the case where it was not stated from what time an increased rent was to commence;³ where the contract did not state, either directly or by reference, the length of the term to be granted;⁴ where a contract for a lease for lives neither named the lives nor decided by whom they were to be named;⁵ where an auctioneer's receipt was set up as a contract, but it did not refer to the conditions of sale, or show the proportion which the deposit was to bear to the price;⁶ where there was a term as to the expenses which was not settled by the contract;⁷ where there was a contract for a partnership, which defined the term of years, but was silent as to the amount of capital and the manner in which it was to be provided;¹ and where a document showed the amount of rent to be paid by a party to a mining enterprise, but was silent as to the other terms.²

PART III.
Ch. iii.

§ 370. Contracts are often incomplete from their reserving some matter for future agreement: unless perhaps in cases where in the absence of such agreement the law determines the matter,³ such contracts are necessarily incomplete until the further agreement has been come to. A contract to contract is nothing.

Some matter left for future agreement.

§ 371. Where the contract provides for the determination of any material thing by some third person, and this has not been done, the contract is in the same predicament as when the price has been neither expressed in the contract nor ascertained. Cases have occurred where buildings or works have been stipulated to be done in such manner as a third person may direct, and where such direction has either been refused or not given: and in these cases specific performance has been refused.⁴

Contract referring to third person's decision.

§ 372. Besides the express terms of the contract, there are others which, in the absence of any expression to the contrary, are implied by law.⁵ With regard to such terms, therefore, whether they be necessary terms or not, the silence of the contract

⁵ The elements of all contracts have by some jurists been placed in three classes: 1st, those things which are essential, without which the contract cannot exist; 2ndly, those which are of the nature but not of the essence of the contract, being implied in it unless expressly excluded, but capable of being thus excluded without subverting the contract; and 3rdly, the things that are accidental. The terms in question correspond of course with the second of these classes. Pothier, Tr. des Oblig. Part I. chap 1, sect. 1, art. 1, § 3.

does not render it incomplete: thus a contract to sell property described merely as cottages and lands purchased by the vendor of persons named was construed as referring to and importing the sale of the whole of the vendor's interest.¹ A contract to sell a house simply implies that the interest sold is the fee simple;² and a contract to renew is presumed to be for the same term as the preceding lease.³

Condition for good title implied.

§ 373. In every contract for the sale of land, a condition is implied for a good title,⁴ and for the delivery-up of the deeds; so that where this was prevented by the accidental destruction of the deeds subsequent to the contract, it was held that the vendor could not enforce the sale.⁵ The title to be shown, of course, varies according to the nature of the property to be sold:⁶ in the case of the sale of a lease, it formerly included the title of the lessor,⁷ except in the case of a bishop's lease.⁸ But by the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874,⁹ it has been provided that under a contract to grant or assign a term of years whether derived or to be derived out of a freehold or leasehold estate the intended lessee or assign shall not be entitled to call for the title to the freehold; and by the same Act certain other provisions of a kind very common in contracts of sale are, in the absence of stipulation to

The distinction is probably not of much practical importance, for the right, if collateral, is so closely connected with the contract that they always seem to go together.

the contrary, made implied terms in contracts for the sale of land. The statutory provisions with regard to title do not preclude the purchaser from showing aliunde that the title of the vendor is bad.¹

PART III.
Ch. iii.

§ 374. The terms conferring on the purchaser a right to a good title are conditions for the benefit of the purchaser, and may accordingly be waived by him, though the vendor may desire to insist on them as a ground for discharging himself from the contract.²

Conditions
may be waived.

§ 375. On principle there seems much in favour of the view, that a contract for an under-lease implies that the sub-lessee is to be subject to all the covenants in the superior lease, and it is not unsupported by authority.³ But it has been determined that this implication can only arise where the purchaser had a fair opportunity of ascertaining for himself the provisions of the original lease:⁴ and if the contract were silent, and unusual provisions were found in the head lease, the Court would probably not enforce specific performance on the ground of the implication referred to.⁵ Possession taken by the intended lessee is a strong circumstance to fix him with an acceptance of the terms of the head lease.⁶ But it is not conclusive, and the circumstances under which the possession was taken may deprive it of this effect.⁷

§ 376. The question whether or no there is an implication in executory contracts in favour of the insertion in the executed contract of all such stipulations as are usually inserted in such contracts, appears one still open in our law.⁸

Ch. iii.

Implied
terms rebutted by a condition or by notice.

§ 377. An implied term may of course be rebutted by the contract or conditions of sale; as where they limit the title to be deduced, or provide that the purchaser shall simply take the vendor's interest.¹ And further, although an express term of a contract is in nowise affected by notice,² yet notice, communicating knowledge, is sufficient to rebut the presumption of an implied term; for that is something not growing out of the contract itself, but given by law, and a matter therefore, not of contract, but of notice.³ So that, for instance, where a purchaser has notice that the vendor is only a lessee, he cannot insist on the implication which might otherwise arise, that the contract is for the fee.⁴

Where

not be supplied,

formance.

§ 378. Again, a material term may well be supplied by construction or inference where the circumstances justify it: but if neither supplied by expression, construction, nor inference, the contract is incapable of performance. In a contract for the grant of a lease, the date of the commencement of the lease is a material term, and if it does not appear in the contract, by expression or reference, it is incomplete:⁵ nor can it be inferred to begin at the date borne by the memorandum of agreement.⁶

CHAPTER IV.

OF THE UNCERTAINTY OF THE CONTRACT.

PART III.
Ch. iv.

What amount of certainty required.

§ 380. It is obvious that an amount of certainty must be required in proceedings for the specific performance of a contract greater than that demanded in an action for damages. For to sustain the latter proceeding, the proposition required is the negative one, that the defendant has not performed the contract,—a conclusion which may be often arrived at without any exact consideration of the terms of the contract; whilst in proceedings for specific performance it must appear not only that the contract has not been performed, but what is the contract which is to be performed. It is perhaps impossible to lay down any general rule as to what is sufficient certainty in a contract; but it may be safely stated that the certainty required must be a reasonable one, having regard to the subject-matter of the contract,¹ and the circumstances under which and with regard to which it was entered into.² Thus in one case, where there was a contract between two railway companies, that the one should have the right of running with their engines, carriages, and trucks, and carrying traffic upon the line of the other, Parker V.C. held that this was not too uncertain to be enforced.³ “It means,” he said, “a reasonable use,—a use consistent with the proper enjoyment of the subject-matter, and with the rights of the granting party.”¹ And we have already seen that where the terms of the contract are general, but the details are such as the law will supply, the contract will not be considered as objectionable for vagueness and uncertainty.² In one case a contract by a railway company with a landowner, to make such roads, ways, and slips for cattle as might be necessary, was held not incapable of being performed by the Court; but it is to be observed that in this case the company had entered and made the railway.³ In another case, where a rector had agreed to grant a lease of his glebe, “except thirty-seven acres thereof” (which were not specified), Lord Romilly M.R. held that the contract was not void for uncertainty, inasmuch as the lessor had a right to select the thirty-seven acres at any time before the execution of the lease. His Lordship held, however, that this right must be so exercised as not to interfere with the lessee’s beneficial enjoyment of the lands included in the lease.⁴

PART III.
Ch. iv.

§ 381. Where the terms of the contract are originally uncertain, but the contract has been acted on and a user and course of dealing have existed between the parties which gives certainty to what was originally uncertain, the Court has in some cases had regard to this as removing the original difficulty.⁵ Part performance will induce the Court to struggle against the objection of uncertainty.⁶

sarily make it too uncertain for performance. Such words may be understood with sufficient certainty by reference to the words to which they are added and the surrounding facts of the case.¹ Again where, by the contract for a lease, the tenant was to do certain specified works, and "other works" upon the property at a total estimated cost of about 150*l.*, and the specified works were such as would evidently cost nearly that sum, the Court considered the "other works" to be of such a trifling description that their being left undefined was not a ground for refusing specific performance.²

of uncertain contracts.

§ 383. On the ground of uncertainty, the Court has refused specifically to perform marriage-articles prepared by a Jewish rabbi in an obscure form, said to prevail amongst German Jews;³ also a contract for the sale of land, where there was a doubt as to the identification of a plan to be incorporated into the contract.⁴ In another case the Court refused to interfere in respect of an engagement by the defendant, Mr. Kean, to perform at a theatre.⁵ "Independently of the difficulty of compelling a man to act," said Shadwell V.C., "there is no time stated, and it is not stated in what character he shall act; and the thing is altogether so loose that it is perfectly impossible for the Court to determine upon what scheme of things Mr. Kean shall perform his agreement."⁶ And where a vendor had agreed to sell an estate with a reservation of "the necessary land for making a railway through the estate to Prince Town," Jessel M.R. held that the contract could not be enforced by the purchaser.¹

PART III.
Ch. iv.

§ 384. So again, where the contract is discrepant with itself, or there are two different contracts relating to the same subject-matter, the Court will generally refuse specific performance.² In a case,³ where an offer was made to take a house for a specific term and at a certain rent, if put into thorough repair, and stating also that the drawing-rooms would be required to be handsomely decorated according to the present style, and making some further requirements as to painting, and the offer was accepted, the Court of Appeal in Chancery, reversing the decision of Romilly M.R., dismissed the bill on the ground of the uncertainty imported into the contract by the expressions in the offer as to repairs. Where a contract was for the purchase of "the land required" for the construction of a railway, at so much per acre, and the contract contained provisions agreed on between the land agents of the company and the vendor as to roads, culverts, etc., etc., Lord Romilly M.R. (following the decision of Turner V.C. in Webb v. Direct London and Portsmouth Railway Company,⁴ then unreversed,) held that a surveyor going upon the ground, and having the contract in his hand, could accurately ascertain the land to be taken, and that the terms of the contract were therefore sufficiently explicit; but this decision was overruled on appeal, and Knight Bruce L.J. held the language "too vague, too uncertain, too obscure to enable this Court to act with safety or propriety."⁵

Ch. iv.

A contract to take the mines under lands of A. at B., B. being neither a township nor a parish, has also been held uncertain.¹

§ 385. In another case, where there was a contract in general terms for the construction of a railway according to the terms of a specification to be prepared by the engineer of the company for the time being, it was held too vague, obscure, and uncertain to be enforced :² the like was held in the case of a contract to give the plaintiffs accommodation for the sale of their articles in the refreshment-rooms of the defendants, and to furnish them with the necessary appliances.³ The like was again held where one partner proposed to sell to the other his share in the business, and that a large portion of his capital should remain in the business, but the writing did not state how much, for how long, or at what interest, and this proposal was accepted.⁴ And again, where on the sale of a piece of land there were stipulations that, in the event of there being any coals or ironstone under the land, a royalty of so much per ton should be paid thereon by the purchaser to the vendor, and also that any mines required to be left by a certain railway company were to be paid for, as if the same had been gotten, out of the money to be received from the railway company ; it was held, with regard to the latter stipulation, that it was incapable of being worked out, inasmuch as if the company bought the mines, the contingency whether there was any coal or ironstone under the land would remain undecided ; and as to the former stipulation, that the parties seemed to have intended to work it out by a reservation of mines to the vendor, and a lease of them by the vendor to the purchaser, but that there was nothing to guide the Court as to the stipulations to be included in such a lease, except the rates of royalty; and the Court accordingly declined to enforce the contract for sale.¹

§ 386. The same certainty will not be required in cases where there is any element of fraud, as in simple cases of specific performance of a contract. Thus where A. agreed with B. in effect that if B. would not try to buy a certain estate, A. would try to buy, and in case of success would cede a portion of the estate to B. at a certain price: and B. acted on his bargain and allowed A. to purchase: and A. having purchased refused to perform his part and set up the uncertainty of the part to be ceded: the Court held that the defence could not avail, and directed an inquiry to ascertain the portion to be given up and the price. It seems that if this could not have been ascertained, B. might have claimed the whole estate.²

Less certainty required where there is fraud.

CHAPTER V.

OF THE WANT OF FAIRNESS IN THE CONTRACT.

PART III.
Ch. v.

Nature
of the fairness required.

§ 387. THERE are many instances in which, though there is nothing that actually amounts to fraud, there is nevertheless a want of that equality¹ and fairness in the contract which, as we have seen, are essential in order that the Court may exercise its extraordinary jurisdiction in specific performance. In cases of fraud² the Court will not only not perform a contract, but will rescind it; but there are many cases in which the Court in the exercise of the jurisdiction in specific performance will stand still, and interfere neither for the one purpose nor the other.³

Unfairness in the terms or in extrinsic matters.

§ 388. The unfairness in question may be either in the terms of the contract itself, or it may be in matters extrinsic and the circumstances under which it was made: with regard to the latter, parol evidence is of course admissible.⁴

When ascertained.

§ 389. The fairness of the contract, like all its other qualities, must be judged of at the time it is entered into, or at least when the contract becomes absolute, and not by subsequent events:⁵ for the fact

² The jurisdiction to rescind is, of course, not confined to cases of actual fraud. See per James L.J. in Torrance v. Bolton, L. R. 8 Ch. at p. 124.

⁴ Davis v. Symonds, 1 Cox, 402.

⁵ So as to hardship: see infra, § 418.

that events, uncertain at the time of the contract, may afterwards happen in a manner contrary to the expectation of one or both of the parties, is no reason for holding the contract to have been unfair. "The period," said the Irish Lord Chancellor Manners, "at which the Court is to examine the agreement between the parties is the time when they contracted."¹

§ 390. In the case, however, of contracts to sell at a price to be fixed or any other condition to be performed before they become absolute, it may be urged that the time when the contract becomes absolute, and not the date of its signature, is the time to judge of its fairness. Unfairness in the valuation is certainly an objection.

§ 391. The principle of judging of the fairness of a contract at its date applies to compromises and settlements of family and other questions. "Where parties, whose rights are questionable, have equal knowledge of facts, and equal means of ascertaining what their rights really are, and they fairly endeavour to settle their respective rights amongst themselves, every Court must feel disposed to support the conclusions or agreements to which they may fairly come at the time,² and that notwithstanding the subsequent discovery of some common error"³ or a subsequent judicial decision showing the rights of the parties to have been different from what they supposed, or that one party had nothing to give up.⁴ And the uncertainty which may render a compromise fair, and therefore binding, may be either in some future and uncertain event, or the future ascertainment of some event past and therefore in itself certain, as, for instance, whether a son was legitimate or not,¹ or whether an uncle had made a particular will or not.²

§ 392. The principle just stated is perhaps most frequently illustrated by cases of family arrangement or of compromise; but it is applicable to contracts of whatsoever nature. The case of Parker v. Palmer,³ which came before the Court in the fourteenth year of Charles II., illustrates this. Parker, as it appears, had, during the Commonwealth, sold a lease which he had from a dean and chapter for three lives, to Palmer, the price agreed on being £4,320. Subsequently the purchaser agreed with the vendor that, if he would abate him £420, he would reconvey the lease whenever the King and dean and chapter were restored: the abatement was made: the King and Church were restored: and thereupon the vendor sued for a reconveyance, which was accordingly decreed by the then Master of the Rolls, and affirmed by Lord Clarendon and Sir Orlando Bridgeman. Again, where a man agreed to sell for £20 an allotment thereafter to be made to him under an inclosure, and it turned out to be worth £200, he was nevertheless compelled to perform his contract:⁴ and so in a case before Leach V.C., where he maintained a contract entered into without any fraud or concealment, by which one partner agreed with the retiring partner to give him £2,000 for the concern, though they knew the partnership to be insolvent, his Honour said, "Suppose the case of a trade attended with great risk, one partner despairing, the other confident and willing to buy the share of his partner, and give him £2,000 for it; on what possible ground could this contract be invalidated?"⁵ The cases in which the thing sold is described in general terms,—as, for example, a manor,—and the extent and value of it are at the time uncertain,¹ and also the cases in which the vendor only sells such interest in the property as he has, where that which is sold turns out differently from the purchaser's expectations, are analogous to those before stated.²

§ 393. But in order to bring a contract within this principle, the uncertainty as to the subject-matter of the contract must at the time of the contract have been a real one to both parties, either from the nature of things or from the state of knowledge of both parties. A contract entered into by one party who knows that the subject-matter of the contract does not exist with another who does not know, will not, it seems, be executed by the Court, though its terms may be such as to put the ignorant party on his guard, and to throw the uncertainty on him. In one case, the particulars described the subject of the sale as the interest, if any, of Francis Norton in certain stock and also in a lease, and stated that there was a lien of £100 on the lease, and the conditions provided that even if it should appear that Francis Norton had no interest in the premises, the purchaser should have no remedy against the vendor to compel him to refund; in consequence of the state of certain partnership accounts which was known to the vendor, but which the purchaser had no means of ascertaining, the interest sold was of no value whatsoever, and was in fact only exposed to sale for the purpose of enabling certain proceedings to be taken against the separate estate of Francis Norton: the vendor made no representations as to the value, but received from the purchaser £150 as the purchase-money: Lord Hatherley (then Wood V.C.) set aside the sale at the suit of the purchaser, with costs against the vendor, on the ground that the purchaser was buying what might be worth nothing, while the vendor was selling what was worth nothing.¹

The contingency must have been understood as within the contract.

§ 394. Further, the principle in question will not apply where, though the terms of the contract may express an uncertainty, that uncertainty was not understood by the parties to comprise the event which actually happens. Thus where A. contracted with B. for the sale of a manor, and stipulated that he should not be obliged to define its boundary, and, the manor turning out to comprise a valuable property not before known to either party to be part of it, the purchaser, who had previously sought to repudiate the contract, filed his bill for performance, Lord Romilly M.R., on consideration of the evidence, came to the conclusion that neither party intended to sell or buy a mere doubtful matter, and that both parties at the time of the contract believed that it included something different from what would then be conveyed to the plaintiff, if the conveyance were to be executed as he claimed it, and accordingly dismissed the bill, but without costs.²

Davis v. Shepherd.

§ 395. In another case there was a farm which appears to have contained 181 acres, and had coal under it, which was known or believed to be traversed by a fault: the owners agreed to demise to A. the minerals under a portion of the farm which lay to the eastward of an upthrow fault to the east: the quantity was described as supposed to be 98 acres or thereabouts. There were to be a rent certain and royalties on the coal raised. It turned out that the fault left 173 instead of 98 acres to the east of it. The Court of Appeal in Chancery thought it clear that of such

§ 396. In contracts to sell at a price to be fixed by a third person, the Court would no doubt consider the unfairness of the valuer's conduct as a bar to the right to specific performance. So in one case, where the Court came to the conclusion that it was doubtful whether the valuation had been made with a due attention to accuracy, Lord Eldon refused specific performance of the contract to sell.²

§ 397. In another case, where the amount of rent to be paid was referred to arbitrators and an umpire, one of the arbitrators so far misconducted himself as to rest his decision, not on his own judgment, but on the will of one of the parties interested, and the umpire proceeded on the footing of an outlay of money by the tenant for which the contract contained no stipulation, the House of Lords reversed a decree for specific performance pronounced by the Irish Court of Chancery.³

§ 398. In another case, where the referees consulted the umpire and made their award as to the value of coal upon his estimate, though one at least of the referees thought it wrong, this circumstance was held fatal to the valuation and the suit.⁴ Other objections were discussed, and it was held that the objections (i.) that the valuers did not examine witnesses, and (ii.) that one of the valuers did not go down the mine, but acted on the report of his grandson, were not sustainable: but another objection, that the valuers did not sign their award together, was held entitled to much weight though not determined to be valid. This case is a very instructive one as to the duty of referees or valuers.

§ 399. In judging of the fairness of a contract, the Court will look not merely at the terms of the contract itself, but at all the surrounding circumstances,—such as intimidation and duress of the defendant,¹ the mental incapacity of the parties, though falling short of insanity,² their age or poverty, the manner in which the contract was executed, the circumstances that the parties were acting without a solicitor, that the property was reversionary, or that the price was not the full value.³

§ 400. Therefore, whenever there are evidences of distress in the party against whom performance is sought,⁴ or he is an illiterate person, or whenever there are any circumstances of surprise, or want of advice,⁵ or anything which seems to import that there was not a full, entire, and intelligent consent to the contract,⁶ the Court is extremely cautious in carrying it into effect. Still, it is not the doctrine of the Court that a man cannot contract without his solicitor at his elbow,⁷ or that a man in insolvent circumstances, or in prison, is disabled from selling his estate: and if a contract made under such circumstances will bear the careful

§ 401. It is enough, generally speaking, to induce the Court to refuse performance, that there are any circumstances about the making of the contract which render it not fair and honest to call for its execution; it is not needful that there was any intentional unfairness or dishonesty at the time.² A leading case on this subject is Twining v. Morrice,³ where the bill was by a purchaser against a vendor: at the sale, which was by auction, the solicitor, who was known to be the agent of the vendor, had made some biddings for the plaintiff, which from his known relationship to the vendor were thought to be the biddings of a puffer, and so damped the sale: the act was done in inadvertence by the solicitor; but as it was done at the plaintiff's instance, specific performance was refused by Lord Kenyon M.R.

§ 402. Unfairness arising from misstatements is considered under the head of Misrepresentation:⁴ and cases relating to the silence or suppression of a fact by one party are considered in the chapter on Fraud.⁵ But it seems possible that there may be cases where silence is not fraudulent, but yet creates such a case of hardship as prevents the interference of the Court in specific performance. On this ground was put a case where a lessee obtained the renewal of a lease on the surrender of an old one, knowing and suppressing the fact, which was unknown to the lessor, that the person on whose life the old lease depended was in extremis, and the Court declined to aid the lessee.⁶ And in a case before Lord Cranworth, where the same solicitor acted for both parties, but did not disclose to both parties the whole nature of the dealing, or place his

§ 403. On the ground of want of fairness, the Court will not assist one party to a contract specifically to enforce it against the other, who at the time of entering into it was in a state of intoxication, and that even in the absence of any unfair advantage taken of his situation which would induce the Court to rescind the contract.² But the mere fact that some glasses of liquor had been drunk before the signing of the contract will not avoid it, if there be nothing to show that the defendant acted without a full understanding of what he was doing.³ In one case Stuart V.C. refused to allow a third party, who, having got a subsequent transfer of the property, was the substantial defendant, to avail himself of this defence.⁴

§ 404. One kind of that unfairness which stays the interference of the Court arises where the enforcement of the contract would be injurious to third persons. Therefore where an estate was settled in strict settlement, giving to the settlor a life estate and an ultimate remainder, and the tenant for life entered into a contract for the sale of the fee, the Court refused to allow the purchaser to take the interest of the tenant for life with compensation, on the ground that a father and a stranger would be likely to use an estate without impeachment of waste in a different way, and that therefore the sale might prejudice the interests of the persons in remainder.⁵

Again, where bankers, after a customer had commenced liquidation proceedings, secretly took a guarantee from his brother that the bank's loss should not exceed £2,000, and thereupon forebore to take proceedings against the customer or to prove against his estate, the Court, on the ground that this arrangement tended to give the bankers an undue advantage over the other creditors, dismissed a bill filed by the bankers to enforce specific performance of the guarantee.¹

§ 406. If a voluntary settlor enters into a contract to sell the estate and brings an action to carry the contract into execution, the Court will not generally assist him thus to override the settlement and prejudice the interests of the persons claiming under it:² but it seems that if the purchaser is willing to complete on having a good title shown, and his only objection, the existence of the voluntary settlement, is one that he can remove by completing the purchase, the general rule will not apply.³

§ 407. The Court will not generally exercise its extraordinary power in compelling a specific performance, where to do so would necessitate a breach of trust or of a prior contract with a third person,⁴ or would compel a person to do what he is not lawfully competent to do, even though at the time of contract the act might have been lawful,⁵—partly, as it seems, on the ground of the unfairness and illegal taint of such a contract in itself, and partly of the hardship to which it would expose the person forced to execute it. The plaintiff "must also," said Lord Redesdale, "show that, in seeking the performance, he does not call upon the other party to do an act which he is not lawfully competent to do; for, if he does, a consequence is produced that quite passes by the object of the Court in exercising the jurisdiction, which is to do more complete justice."¹

In another case, the Court refused performance of a contract for the sale of leaseholds by one of two executors, on the ground that, under the circumstances of the case, it would be an injury to the cestuis que trust, and expose the executor to extraordinary risk from them, and that either of these grounds was sufficient to stay the interference of the Court.²

Court's usual unwillingness to enforce any transaction resulting in injury to third persons.

§ 412. The law with regard to depreciatory conditions of sale used by trustees has recently been modified. By the 3rd section of the Trustee Act, 1888, it is provided that no sale made by a trustee shall be impeached by any cestui que trust, upon the ground that any of the conditions subject to which the sale was made may have been unnecessarily depreciatory, unless it shall also appear that the sale was thereby rendered inadequate.

§ 413. Even where there is nothing amounting to a distinct breach of trust the Court will be delicate of interfering against trustees; so that where, in a contract for sale by them, there is any want of a business-like character, the Court will not, it seems, interfere, unless the price be shown to be equal, or more than equal, to the value of the property.¹

§ 414. The doctrine does not apply only to persons standing in the position of formal trustees, but, it seems, to all cases of trust and confidence. So, that if a contract were the result of a gross breach of duty by an agent towards his principal, the Court would not, it seems, enforce the consequences of that act.² And so, railway directors having duties towards the shareholders, the Court will not enforce any contract amounting to a breach of duty to the prejudice of all or any of the shareholders at the instance of a plaintiff cognizant of the circumstances.³

§ 415. The Court has on this ground not only refused specific performance, but in a case where the purchaser must have known that assignees in bank-

OF THE HARDSHIP OF THE CONTRACT.

Ch. vi.

Hardship
a bar to the Court's interference.

When
ascertained.

§ 417. It is a well-established doctrine that the Court will not enforce the specific performance of a contract, the result of which would be to impose great hardship on either of the parties to it;¹ and this although the party seeking specific performance may be free from the least impropriety of conduct.²

§ 418. The question of the hardship of a contract is generally to be judged of at the time at which it is entered into: if it be then fair and just and not productive of hardship, it will be immaterial that it may, by the force of subsequent circumstances or change of events, have become less beneficial to one party,³ except where these subsequent events have been in some way due to the party who seeks the performance of the contract. For whatever contingencies may attach to a contract, or be involved in the performance of either part, have been taken upon themselves by the parties to it. It has been determined that the reasonableness of a contract is to be judged of at the time it is entered into, and not by the light of subsequent events,⁴ and we have already seen that the same principle applies in considering the fairness of a contract.⁵

§ 419. On this ground it has been decided in several cases in Ireland, that where a lessee of renewable leaseholds covenants with his sub-lessee for renewal without fine on every renewal to himself, and subsequently a renewal is made to him, but on terms far less beneficial than had been the custom at the time he entered into the covenant, and on the expectation of the continuance of which he had so covenanted, he will nevertheless be obliged to renew to his sub-lessee, and that without any contribution towards the increased fine which he has paid.¹ So where railway companies contract unconditionally for the purchase of land, and by their laches their powers expire before the completion of the purchase, that circumstance furnishes them with no ground of defence.²

§ 420. This is further well illustrated by the cases on awards: for where the contract contained in the submission is unfair, or conducing to hardship, the Court will not interfere;³ whereas hardship or unreasonableness in the award itself will not be a bar to the interference of the Court; for the submission and not the award is the contract, and unreasonableness in the award is therefore a matter subsequent, and arising from the decision of a Judge whom the parties themselves have chosen, and the risks attending whose judgment they have taken on themselves.⁴

by reason of events subsequent to the contract. Thus in The City of London v. Nash,¹ where a party had covenanted to re-build several houses, and, instead, had built but two new houses, and only repaired the others, but in so doing had laid out at least £2,200, and put them in very good condition; Lord Hardwicke, holding that the covenant was one which in its nature the Court could enforce, yet considered that specific performance would entail so great a loss and hardship on the defendant, and be so useless to the plaintiff, that the Court would not enforce it, whether the defendant had mistaken the sense of the covenant to re-build, or perhaps had even knowingly evaded it. And so again, where a mortgagor had entered into a contract to grant a lease, expecting to obtain the mortgagee's consent, but failed in this, and was in circumstances which rendered him practically unable to redeem: in a suit instituted by the intended lessee, the Court refused specific performance, but granted the alternative prayer of the bill for rescission.²

quent

§ 422. Notwithstanding these cases the general rule seems to be, that events subsequent to the contract, and not so involved in it as to render it unequal at the time it is entered into, cannot be brought forward to show the hardship of enforcing it. But where the subsequent events alleged for this purpose are acts of the plaintiff himself, or events in some sense within his power, the Court may have regard to them in exercising its discretionary jurisdiction in specific performance. There are cases in which the Court has considered that, by means of these events, such a change has taken place in the relative position of the plaintiff and defendant, as to render it inequitable specifically to enforce the contract against the latter.

§ 423. The leading case on this head is The Duke of Bedford v. The Trustees of the British Museum,¹ before Plumer M.R. and Lord Eldon. Lord William Russell and Lady Rachel his wife, being in the occupation of Southampton House (afterwards called Bedford House) as their residence, in 1675 conveyed to Mr. Montagu adjoining land, for the purpose of his erecting on it a mansion, with suitable appendages of gardens and offices; and Mr. Montagu entered into covenants with Lady Rachel Russell not to use the land in a particular manner, with a view to the more ample enjoyment of the adjoining lands. Lady Rachel Russell, or those claiming under her, subsequently covered these lands, or a considerable part of them, with houses, and Southampton House was pulled down to make way for streets and buildings. On a motion by the Duke of Bedford, who claimed under Lady Rachel Russell, for an injunction to restrain the defendants, who claimed under Mr. Montagu, from using the land in a way at variance with the covenants of the deed of 1675, Plumer M.R. and Lord Eldon held that the Duke or his predecessors having altered the state of the property in the way mentioned, it would be inequitable, unreasonable, and unjust, thus to enforce the covenants specifically, and the plaintiff was left to his remedy at Law.² And so, long acquiescence in a variation from the mode of renewal pointed out by a covenant for that purpose has been held a reason for not specifically enforcing the covenant in its original terms.³ unintentionally injurious, the Court will refuse specific performance. Thus, in one case, the contract for sale of leaseholds liable to a covenant to insure stipulated that the contract should be completed on the 20th July: the insurance expired on the 24th June: one of the vendors renewed for a month only, to the 24th July: the contract in fact was not completed before the 26th August, when the parties met for that purpose, and it was discovered that the insurance had expired and the leaseholds had become liable to forfeiture; and the purchaser refused to complete. Kindersley V.C. held that the property was at the risk of the purchaser: but as the vendors' conduct had operated as a trap to the purchaser, he refused specific performance.¹

Distinction between patent and latent hardship.

§ 425. It would seem that, in considering the hardship which may flow from the execution of a contract, the Court will consider whether it is a result obviously flowing from the terms of the contract, so that it must have been present at the time of the contract to the minds of the contracting parties, or whether it arises from something collateral, and so far concealed and latent, as that it might not have been thus present to their minds.² It is obvious that a far higher degree of hardship must be present in the former, than in the latter class of cases, for it to operate on the discretion of the Court.

Hardship induced by the party himself.

§ 426. The cases which have been already quoted as showing that the hardship must be judged of at the time of the contract also illustrate another obvious principle, namely, that where the hardship has been brought upon the defendant by himself, it shall not be allowed to furnish any defence against the specific performance of the contract,³ at least whenever the thing he has contracted to do is "reasonably possible."¹

§ 427. It will not constitute a case of hardship that the ultimate object which a party had in view in entering into a contract may have become impossible: the mere failure of the purchaser's speculation will not discharge him from his obligations to the vendor. Thus, where one person contracted with another for the purchase of a piece of land on which he intended to erect a mill, for which the consent of a corporation was requisite, the refusal to give this consent furnished no defence to the purchaser, although he had, in consequence of the object he had in view, given a very high price for the ground.² And so also the fact that a mine which the defendant had contracted to take for £1,400 turned out literally worth nothing was held to be no defence to a suit for specific performance of the contract.³

Failure of party's scheme.

§ 428. In cases against companies, the Court will not consider the hardship which may result to the individual members from enforcing a contract made by the whole body; for "the Court cannot recognize any party interested in the corporation, but must look to the rights and liabilities of the corporation itself;"⁴ and though, as we have seen,⁵ the decision of the case in which this language was used by Lord Cottenham has been disapproved of in the House of Lords, this principle seems to be untouched, and to rest on solid reasoning.

Forfeiture
a circumstance of hardship.

§ 429. If the execution of the contract would render the defendant liable to a forfeiture, the Court will regard this as a circumstance of hardship: so where a man was entitled to a small estate under his father's will, on condition that, if he sold it within twenty-five years, half the purchase-money should go to a brother; the owner agreed to sell it, but Lord Hardwicke held that the hardship was sufficient to determine the Court not to interfere.¹ So where a lessee sold certain lots of building ground, and agreed to make a road, which it was found he could not do without incurring the risk of forfeiting a piece of leasehold land through which it was to pass, or of being sued by the lessor, the Court, granting the purchaser specific performance of the contract for sale, refused to enforce this stipulation, but gave him compensation for the non-performance of it.²

Excep-
tions.

§ 430. But the Court will give no effect to this defence unless it clearly appear that the forfeiture will follow on the judgment for specific performance. The mere apprehension of such a result is not enough. Nor will the Court give much, if any, consideration to this defence where the forfeiture is the result of other acts of the defendant himself. So where a lessee of a theatre, having by his lease power to lease forty-one boxes, agreed to let a box to the plaintiff, and in defence alleged that he had already let forty-one boxes, so that to perform his contract with the plaintiff would work a forfeiture, his defence failed.³ vendor is liable to certain covenants and has not expressly stipulated that the purchaser shall indemnify him against them, yet the purchaser, so soon as he has notice of them, whether by the particulars of sale¹ or subsequently to the contract,² is bound to elect either to rescind the contract or to execute an indemnity to the vendor: for otherwise the vendor would lose his land but retain his liability in respect of it. In the earlier of the cases cited, it was only decided that the purchaser as plaintiff could not enforce specific performance without entering into such indemnity; but in the latter, that the vendor as plaintiff might put the purchaser to his election.

§ 432. In one case where trustees had joined their cestuis que trust in a contract for sale, and had personally agreed to exonerate the estate from the incumbrances, and it did not appear whether the purchase-money would be sufficient to discharge them, or what would be the extent of the deficiency, the Court refused specific performance on the ground of hardship, although the plaintiff had had possession of the estate, and could not be deprived of the benefit of his contract without great inconvenience.³ In another case a mortgagee with power of sale had obtained a foreclosure decree, and, intending to sell as absolute owner, entered into a contract for sale to the plaintiff. In the contract there was copied, by inadvertence, from conditions of sale of other parts of the estate drawn up some time before, a clause stating the vendor to be a mortgagee with power of sale: the vendor offered to convey as owner under the foreclosure decree: the purchaser insisted on a title under the power of sale: but the Court held, that to impose on the vendor the risk of opening the foreclosure

But where a tenant for life had agreed to grant a mining lease, and to a bill by the intended lessee he objected that he was only tenant for life, and that he could not grant the lease in question under his power, and that he should be accountable for waste, Lord Nottingham appears to have considered this to be no defence, and he decreed the defendant to execute the contract so far as he was capable of doing.²

laneous

§ 434. In one case Lord Hardwicke, on the ground of hardship, refused specific performance of a covenant to leave buildings in repair contained in an ecclesiastical lease, the fact of the description of the buildings being continued from lease to lease without variation showing that the buildings in question might not have been in being at the time of the making of the lease.³

And where a lessee of mines covenanted that if at any time before the expiration of the lease, the lessor should give notice of his desire to take the machinery and stock about the mines, the lessee would at the expiration of the lease deliver the articles specified in the notice to the lessor, on his paying the value, to be ascertained by valuation, the Court held the covenant thus framed to be so injurious and oppressive to the lessee that it refused specific performance, and would not interfere to prevent a breach by injunction.⁴

Again, where A., in consideration of B.'s not joining in barring an entail, agreed to convey to him, his heirs or assigns, the fee of such parts of the estates, which were situate in three counties, as he or they should choose, to the yearly value of £200; the inconvenience and hardship to which such an option might expose the party who had granted it was one ground on which specific performance was refused by the House of Lords.¹ In another case the Court refused to enforce a contract for service by which a young man placed himself almost entirely in the power of certain great traders, by whom he was employed as traveller and clerk.²

§ 435. Where a contract, if enforced, would make a man buy what he could not enjoy, the Court will, on the ground of hardship, refuse to interfere, as in the case of a contract to sell a piece of land to which no way could be shown, the contract itself being silent as to any right of way.³

CHAPTER VII.

OF INADEQUACY OF THE CONSIDERATION.

PART III.
Ch. vii.

How it may appear in the contract.

§ 438. We now proceed to inquire how far the inadequacy of the consideration for a contract may furnish a defence against its specific performance. The inadequacy may, it is evident, in contracts for sale be either on the side of the vendor or of the purchaser; either in the purchase-money or in the thing sold: or again, in other cases, it may consist in the inequality of the contingencies to which the contract has reference.¹

Difference between cases of vendor and purchaser.

§ 439. It has been justly remarked that there is a great difference between the defence grounded on the inadequacy of purchase-money set up by the vendor, and on the excess of it set up by the purchaser; for whilst the Court can ascertain the former by a reference to the general market value of such property, it has no satisfactory means of determining what represents the money value to a particular individual of a particular estate.²

Inadequacy with other circumstances.

§ 440. There is no doubt that inadequacy of consideration when combined with any case of fraud, misrepresentation, studied suppression of the true value of the property,³ or with any circumstances of oppression, or even of ignorance,⁴ is a most material ingredient in the case, as affecting the discretion of the Court in granting specific performance; and further, it may materially concur in constituting a case for setting aside a transaction. Thus, in Cockell v. Taylor,¹ Lord Romilly M.R. set aside an alleged sale of land to the plaintiff, where the consideration was about ten times the value of the land,—the purchase having been made the condition of a loan which the plaintiff was very anxious to negotiate in order to prosecute his claim in Chancery to some valuable property, and he being in humble circumstances and illiterate. “Coupled with such circumstances,” said his Lordship, “the evidence of over-price is of great weight, and if the case had stood here I should have been of opinion that this transaction was one which could not stand.”² Inadequacy of consideration may also concur with other circumstances to show that the transaction was in the nature not of a contract for sale but of a gift, in respect of which therefore the Court would not interfere, as it does not decree the specific performance of incomplete gifts.³

PART III.
Ch. vii.
Cockell v. Taylor.

§ 441. The question however which has been principally discussed is the effect on contracts of the inadequacy of consideration taken by itself and abstracted from all other circumstances.

Inadequacy by itself.

§ 442. With regard to it as a ground for the setting aside of transactions, the doctrine of the Court is that inadequacy of consideration, if only amounting to hardship or even great hardship, is no ground for relieving a man “from a contract which he has willingly and willingly entered into;”⁴ but that it may be so enormously great as to be a conclusive evidence of fraud, and that it is then a ground for setting aside the transaction affected by it.⁵

PART III.
Ch. vii.

As a defence to specific performance.

§ 443. Regarded as a ground of defence to a specific performance, the doctrine of the older cases was that inadequacy of consideration was a sufficient ground, it being regarded, even where not amounting to evidence of fraud, as a circumstance of hardship which would stay the interposition of the Court. Thus, in a case before Eyre C.B., that Judge said that, independently of all consideration of fraud, "the Court upon the mere consideration of its being so hard a bargain will not enforce it."¹ So, in a case where there was a contract between two men each sui juris for the sale of an estate worth £10,000 for £6,000 down and £14,000 more, payable at the death of a man aged sixty-four or sixty-five, and there were no circumstances of pressure or circumvention, Lord Alvanley M.R. refused, on a cross-bill, to set aside the contract; but he also refused specific performance of it on the ground of its being a hard bargain.² And in an earlier case, where a purchaser had, during the South Sea mania, purchased a house under the Court for £10,500, and paid a deposit of £1,000, the purchaser, submitting to forfeit his deposit, was discharged by Lord Macclesfield on the ground of the general delusion which the nation was under at the time of the contract, and the imaginary values then put by people on estates, and this in spite of a most able argument by Lord Nottingham, who argued on behalf of his granddaughters the plaintiffs.³

Mere inadequacy not a defence.

§ 444. But it seems now to be established by the decisions of Lord Eldon and Grant M.R., that mere inadequacy of consideration is no defence to specific performance, unless it amount to an evidence of fraud, and so would furnish a ground even for cancelling the contract.¹ "Unless the inadequacy of price," said Lord Eldon in one case, "is such as shocks the conscience and amounts in itself to conclusive and decisive evidence of fraud in the transaction, it is not itself a sufficient ground for refusing a specific performance."² And in an earlier case, where, a sale by auction having taken place for about half the value of the estate, Lord Rosslyn had refused specific performance, Lord Eldon, on a re-hearing, although he ultimately decided the case on a question of evidence, doubted the principle of the decree, and expressed an opinion that a sale by auction could not be set aside for mere inadequacy of price.³ His Lordship also applied the same principle in the instance of an annuity transaction.⁴ The doctrine was adopted by Grant M.R. and Lord Erskine, and is now, it is conceived, the well-established rule of the Court.⁵ An illustration of it may be found in the case of Abbott v. Swoorder,⁶ where an estate was bought for £5,000, the value of which was considered by Knight Bruce V.C. to be £3,500; but this inadequacy of consideration was held both by him and by Lord St. Leonards to be no bar to specific performance, which was accordingly decreed at the suit of the vendor.

§ 445. One case before Kindersley V.C. must be referred to, as it appears to break the recent current of authorities. His Honour there considered the older cases on the subject, and came to the conclusion that mere inadequacy of price, without the least impropriety of conduct on the part of the plaintiff, was a sufficient defence: and his Honour did not advert to the proposition that such inadequacy must amount to evidence of fraud, but treated it as one form of hardship which prevented the action of the Court.¹

Reason of the rule.

§ 446. The general rule, that the hardship of a contract is, independently of fraud, a ground for refusing its specific performance would seem to carry with it the particular rule that inadequacy of consideration, when amounting to hardship but not to fraud, should yet be a defence. But there appears (notwithstanding an expression of opinion from the Bench to the contrary²) great good sense in refusing to adopt such a rule. To make a contract for an insufficient consideration incapable of enforcement by the purchaser, would be practically to prevent a man from selling his property at less than its value,—however impossible it might be to sell it at its value, however desirous he might be to sell it for the price actually obtained, however desirable it might be for his interest that he should do so, and however unwilling or unable the purchaser might be to purchase at its full value. The rule would, when it did not stop the sale, yet further reduce the amount receivable by the vendor, because the purchaser would in effect indemnify himself for the risk he ran by offering less purchase-money than he otherwise would have done. The freedom of contract, including in it the freedom to enter into enforceable contracts, should never be infringed without sufficient cause. But furthermore, if inadequacy of consideration short of fraud were a bar to specific performance, the question would arise as to the amount of inadequacy which should so operate—a question not easy to answer.

¹ Falcke v. Gray, 4 Drew. 651.

² Nott v. Hill, 2 Cas. in Ch. 120.

PART III.
Ch. vii.

§ 447. In the later Roman law, these difficulties in the way of relieving against inadequacy of consideration in certain cases were overcome, at least as to immoveable property. By a Constitution of the Emperors Diocletian and Maximian, the right of rescission for inadequacy of consideration was first introduced.¹ Their Constitution was adopted by Justinian. It fixed the arbitrary standard of half the real price as that which would give the sufferer a right to the interference of the law: when the price paid did not amount to half the real value of the thing sold, the vendor might put the purchaser to his election, either to take back the purchase-money and restore the thing sold, or to keep the thing and make up the deficiency in the purchase-money.² The old French law adopted the same principle, except in the case of sales between co-heirs and co-proprietors, where a defect of one quarter of the price had the same effect as a like defect of one-half in other cases.³ The present law of France is embodied in Article 1674 of the Code Civil, which is remarkable for the stringency of its provisions and for the discussion in the Conseil d'État of which it was the result, a discussion in which the First Consul took a prominent part.⁴ It enables a vendor of an immoveable to require rescission, if he suffers injury to the extent of more than seven-twelfths of the price, though he may by the contract have expressly renounced such right, and have declared that the price given is the full value.

the contract, and not by the light of subsequent events. It is true that, in a case¹ already stated, the circumstance of the contract having been made during the excitement caused by the South Sea scheme was allowed as a reason why the Court relieved a purchaser from the performance of his contract; but the case is one which cannot now be considered as law, and the principle involved seems unjust. It is now therefore well established that the time of the contract is the time for judging of its consideration: thus, to give one example, where an annuity for life forms part of the consideration, and the life drops before any payment is made, this does not render the consideration necessarily inadequate.²

price to be fixed.

§ 449. Where the contract refers the price to a valuer for him to ascertain between the parties, this fact does not of itself preclude the Court from inquiring into the adequacy of the consideration,³ and this inadequacy of consideration would, of course, be strengthened as a defence if any circumstances arose which threw a doubt on the accuracy with which the valuation was made.⁴

Effect of undervaluation.

§ 450. The effect of an undervaluing by the valuers is a question which has however been but little discussed in our Courts: it has been debated with the usual diversity of opinion by the writers on Civil Law.⁵ It is conceived that, if the undervalue were such as to convince the Court that the valuers had acted under fraud or mistake, the contract would be incapable of enforcement in Equity: otherwise, if the undervalue did not so convince the Court.

§ 451. The question of inadequacy of consideration in a sale of reversionary interests, whether arising in a suit to set aside the sale or in a suit for the performance of the contract, was formerly governed by special considerations. The law upon this question has to a certain extent been altered by statute. It is necessary therefore to consider how the law stood before the legislative alteration, and what is the extent of that alteration.

PART III.
Ch. vii.

Sales of reversions.

§ 452. Before the statute hereafter to be referred to, the defence of inadequacy of consideration in respect of contracts for the sale of reversions had two peculiarities which distinguished it from the like defence in the case of ordinary contracts. It was clear (i.) that the proof of inadequacy was a sufficient defence, though there were no accompanying circumstances of fraud or oppression, and though the inadequacy did not amount to evidence of fraud;¹ (ii.) that the burthen of proof lay on the plaintiff purchaser: it rested on him to show that the price was adequate, not on the defendant vendor to show that it was inadequate.²

Before the Sales of Reversions
Act.

§ 453. The principle on which the Court acted in these cases was that a man possessed only of a future interest sells at a disadvantage; it therefore did not apply where the tenant for life and the reversioner concurred, as they together "form a vendor with a present interest";³ and so where a vendor had a rent-charge of £500 in possession and an estate in reversion, and he sold a perpetual rent-charge of £500, he was not considered as within the principle now under consideration, he having it in his power to secure a perpetual rent-charge of that amount in possession.¹

§ 454. The mere fact, however, that some interest in possession was sold together with the reversion, did not, at least where the former was not considerable, take the case out of the rule;² as, for instance, where an annuity in possession was sold together with the reversion, the estimated value of the annuity being only about one-sixth of that of the reversion.³

§ 455. Again, the principle did not apply where the reversionary interest was sold by auction;⁴ and this for two reasons. First, "there being no treaty between vendor and purchaser, there can be no opportunity for fraud or imposition on the part of the purchaser. The vendor is, in no sense, in the power of the purchaser."⁵ Secondly, it being clearly established that the market price of the reversionary interest, and not the estimate of actuaries, was the criterion by which the Court decided the question of undervalue,⁶ and a sale by auction being a mode of ascertaining that market price, it followed that the consideration for the transaction and the value in the eye of the Court must in such cases be one and the same, and that, in the absence of fraud, no question of undervalue could arise.

§ 456. Such was shortly the state of the law before the statute 31 Vict. c. 4. By that statute it was enacted that no purchase made bonâ fide and without fraud or unfair dealing of any reversionary interest in

§ 457. As regards actions for the rescission of contracts for the sale of reversions, the operation of this Act is clear. It makes mere inadequacy no sufficient ground for relief; but it leaves entirely unaffected the jurisdiction which relieves against the fraud which infects catching bargains with heirs, reversioners, or expectants in the life of the father. The doctrines of the Court which throw protection round unwary young men in the hands of unscrupulous persons ready to take advantage of their necessities are entirely unchanged.¹

§ 458. But the Act is silent as regards the specific performance of contracts relating to reversions. Does it therefore leave the law just as it was? or does it for all purposes place sales of reversions on the same footing as other sales so far as regards the question of inadequacy of consideration?

As to specific performance.

No decision has, it is believed, been given upon these questions: but it is submitted that the true conclusion is, that every contract for the sale of a reversion which cannot be relieved against ought primâ facie to be performed: that the object of the Act was to place bonâ fide and honest sales of reversions on the same footing as other sales: and that henceforth in specific performance actions there will rest on the defendant the burthen of proving inadequacy of consideration, and such inadequacy as shocks the conscience of the Court and constitutes evidence of fraud, or as is accompanied by other circumstances of oppression or unfairness.

CHAPTER VIII.

OF WANT OF MUTUALITY IN THE CONTRACT.

§ 460. A CONTRACT to be specifically enforced by the Court must, as a general rule, be mutual,—that is to say, such that it might, at the time it was entered into, have been enforced by either of the parties against the other of them.¹ Whenever therefore, whether from personal incapacity to contract, or the nature of the contract, or any other cause, the contract is incapable of being enforced against one party, that party is equally incapable of enforcing it against the other, though its execution in the latter way might in itself be free from the difficulty attending its execution in the former.

PART III.
Ch. viii.
Mutuality
required.

§ 461. Thus a tenant in tail cannot enforce a contract entered into by a tenant for life, because the tenant in tail could not be sued on it:² an infant cannot sue, because he could not be sued, for a specific performance:³ a purchaser from a person who at the time of the sale had no estate in, or power over, the property sold, or a material part of it, may defend himself on the score of the vendor's original incapacity

Instances.

¹ In Williams v. Williams, L. R. 2 Ch. 294, 304, there was held to be mutuality in a verbal family arrangement. Consider Turner v. May, 32 L. T. N. S. 56.

² Armiger v. Clarke, Bunb. 111; Ricketts v. Bell, 1 De G. & Sm. 335.

³ Flight v. Bolland, 4 Russ. 298. The case of Clayton v. Ashdown, 9 Vin. Abr. 393, may perhaps be explained on the ground of a ratification by the infant after attaining his majority, or as being an application in Equity of the legal principle that the contract, though voidable by the infant, binds the party of full age. The infant cannot recover a deposit paid on the contract, except on the ground of fraud. Wilson v. Kearse, Peake, Add. Cas. 196.

Ch. viii.

to perform his part:¹ a father cannot enforce a contract on the part of his mother-in-law to pay him an allowance in consideration of his giving up to her the custody of his infant children during a specified part of every year:² and where A. agreed with B. not to join in barring an entail, and B. agreed to convey to A. certain parts of the estate on his entering into possession, and it was held, on the authority of Collins v. Plummer,³ that such a contract could not be specifically enforced against A., a specific performance of B.'s part of the contract was refused at the suit of A.'s representatives.⁴ On the same principle it would seem that a contract entered into by several devisees in trust for sale, of whom one was a married woman, would be unenforceable by either side.⁵ So where the relief sought was analogous to the specific performance of a grant of an office, the Court held that, the duties and services incident to the office being personal and confidential in their character, specific performance could not have been decreed against the plaintiff at the suit of the defendant; and consequently, that the plaintiff could not sue the defendant, though there were no personal duties to be performed by the defendant.⁶ Again, where the plaintiffs had agreed to perform certain services in working a railway, which were of such a confidential nature that the Court could not have enforced them if the defendants had sued the plaintiffs; and the defendants were to pay money, and do nothing else; the Court refused specific performance, on the ground, amongst others, of want of mutuality.¹ The like objection prevailed where the plaintiff sued on a contract under which he was to construct a railway, and offered to make the railway and asked for payment.²

PART III.
Ch. viii.

§ 462. A doubt was at one time entertained whether there existed the proper mutuality between a person having entered into a contract to take a lease from a tenant for life with a leasing power and the remainderman:³ but that doubt is now resolved, and it seems clear that such a contract may be enforced by either of these parties.⁴

In contracts under powers.

§ 463. The mutuality of a contract is, as we have seen, to be judged of at the time it is entered into; so that it is no objection to the plaintiff's right, that the defendant may by delay, or other conduct on his part subsequent to the contract, have lost his right against the plaintiff.⁵ And accordingly it has been held to be no defence on the part of a railway company for them to show that they had after the contract suffered the time during which, by their statutory powers, they could purchase the lands to expire:⁶ if such a defence were sustained, it would be to allow defendants to take advantage of their own neglect.

From the time of the execution of the contract being the time to judge of its mutuality it further follows, that the subsequent performance by one party of terms which could not have been enforced by the other will not prevent the objection which would arise from the presence of such terms.¹

Exceptions.

§ 464. The exceptions or apparent exceptions and limitations to the doctrine of mutuality may now be considered.

i. Unilateral
contracts.

§ 465. (i.) The contract may be of such a nature as to give to the one party a right to the performance which it does not give to the other,—as for instance, where a lessor covenants to renew upon the request of his lessee :² or where the contract is in the nature of an undertaking.³ But these are merely cases of conditional contracts: and when the condition has been performed, as for instance, in the case above stated, by a request to renew, the contract becomes absolute and mutual and capable of enforcement alike by either party.⁴

Conditional
contracts.

§ 466. In a recent case⁵ it was held by Kekewich, J., that the doctrine of mutuality does not apply to a contract where the vendor had in the first instance told the purchaser, and the purchaser knew from all the circumstances of the case, that the vendor had no title, and was not likely to have one for some time. The learned judge seems to have considered the contract as a conditional one, which was revocable till the condition was fulfilled, and that it then became binding. PART III.

Ch. viii.

§ 467. In cases arising out of such contracts, the Court will exercise its discretion as to specific performance with great care, and, it seems, view even somewhat narrowly the conduct of the party claiming the benefit of his unilateral right to make the contract absolute.¹ Chesterman
v. Mann.

§ 468. (ii.) Mutuality may be waived by the subsequent conduct of the person against whom the contract could not originally have been enforced: thus, where a purchaser contracts for an estate with a person having no title, or not such as he affects to sell, and the contract therefore is not mutual, for want of interest in the vendor,—yet, if the purchaser investigate the title and make requisitions, or concur in proceedings for the purpose of remedying the defect, he is afterwards precluded from setting up the original want of mutuality in the contract.² ii. Waiver.

§ 469. And so where, from the relation of the parties to one another, the contract is originally binding on the one and not on the other, the latter may by action waive that want of mutuality, and enforce the specific performance of the contract; as in the case of an action by a cestui que trust against his trustee for the performance of a contract for sale, such a contract being originally binding on the trustee, and not on the beneficiary.³ Instances.
The case of a contract for sale by a voluntary settlor is similar, for though he is incapable of enforcing the contract against an unwilling purchaser,⁴ the purchaser may waive the want of mutuality and enforce it against him.¹

§ 470. (iii.) Another apparent exception to the principle in question is afforded by the doctrine which was established very soon after the passing of the Statute of Frauds, that in case of contracts which by that statute are required to be in writing, a party who has not signed the contract may enforce it against one who has.²

§ 471. It has been alleged in support of this doctrine, in the first place, that the statute only requires the contract to be signed by the party to be charged therewith or his agent, and is silent as to the signature of the other party.³ But this reasoning seems inconclusive; because the doctrine of mutuality is independent of the statute, and where one party has signed and the other has not, the rights of the parties, which before the statute were mutual, have by force of it ceased to be such.⁴

A more satisfactory reason is that, by instituting proceedings, the plaintiff has waived the original want of mutuality, and rendered the remedy mutual.⁵

§ 472. On the same ground, a contract contained in a deed-poll was enforced, notwithstanding an objection taken from the unilateral nature of the instrument.⁶

§ 473. (iv.) Where the vendor has not substantially the whole interest which he contracted to sell, he cannot enforce the contract against the purchaser, and yet the purchaser can generally enforce it against him by compelling him to convey what he can, with an abatement of the purchase-money as compensation for the deficiency. This subject will be found discussed in a subsequent chapter.¹

PART III.

iv. Where vendor has only partial interest.

§ 474. In two Irish cases decided by Lord Redesdale, in each of which the party seeking to enforce the contract was at the time when he entered into it aware of the defect in the other party's title,² the principle stated in the last preceding section was held not to apply.

Doubts of Lord Redesdale.

§ 475. In one of these cases, a tenant for life entered into a contract with the plaintiff to grant a lease, which he could not do without the consent of trustees:³ the consent was refused, the contract being in fact intended to give a fine to the tenant for life in fraud of the power: the intended lessee filed his bill against the tenant for life, and contended that he was at least entitled to such a lease as the tenant for life could grant out of his estate. But Lord Redesdale dismissed the bill for want of mutuality. "No man," he said, "signs an agreement but under a supposition that the other party is bound as well as himself: and therefore if the other party is not bound, he signs it under a mistake";⁴ and his Lordship considered that the principle above stated only applies where, on the faith of a contract, one party has put himself in a situation from which he cannot extricate himself, and is therefore willing to forego part of his contract,—where an injury would be sustained by the plaintiff, unless he were to get such an execution of the contract as the defendant could give. In the other case, Lord Redesdale further observed upon the specific performance of contracts by a tenant for life exceeding his power.¹ “I think,” said his Lordship, “Courts of Equity should never enforce such contracts, whether with a view to the party himself or to the person entitled in remainder. In the first place, it is unconscionable in the tenant for life to execute such a lease, because it brings an incumbrance on the estate of the remainderman, and puts him to litigation to get rid of it: and as to the tenant for life himself, it is compelling him to do what is to be the foundation of a future action for damages, if he die before the twenty-one years. The Court will never do this, but will leave the party at once to bring his action for damages. And I also conceive that this sort of contract, obtained by a person who knew at the time the nature of the title, is unconscionable in him, as he makes himself a party knowingly to that which is a fraud on the remainderman; and, under such circumstances, he has no claim to the assistance of a Court of Equity.”²

The principle is well established.

§ 476. This view of the jurisdiction is certainly narrower than that entertained by previous Judges: it has been remarked to be such by Lord Langdale M.R.,³ and has been disapproved of by Lord St. Leonards. “I doubt,” said his Lordship, speaking of Lord Redesdale’s dismissal of the bill in the first of the cases above alluded to, “whether that can be maintained as the law of the Court where there is no fraud in the transaction. If there be a bonâ fide intention to execute the power, and the contract cannot be carried into effect, I do not see why the interest of the tenant for life should not be bound to the extent he is able to bind it, unless there be some inconvenience.”¹ And the principle thus stated is now firmly established, notwithstanding the objection for want of mutuality.²

CHAPTER IX.

OF THE ILLEGALITY OF THE CONTRACT.

PART III.
Ch. ix.

Illegality
a bar to performance of a
contract.

§ 477. THE illegality of a contract or of any part of a contract is of course a bar to its specific performance, as well as to every other proceeding by which either of the parties may seek to enforce it.¹ The interference of the Court is prevented, whether the contract was illegal at the time of its being entered into, or was then legal but has been rendered illegal by subsequent statute law before its execution.² But in the latter case the Court is, it seems, anxious to find some means of executing the contract so far as it may be done without violating the law.³

In foreign
contracts.

§ 478. In the case of foreign contracts, they must, in order to be enforced here, be legal according to the law of this country; and this notwithstanding that such foreign contracts may have been made with a view to performance abroad and to foreign laws. It is not enough that they are valid according to the law of the country where they were made. For “when the Courts of one country are called upon to enforce contracts entered into in another country, the question to be considered is not merely whether the contract sought to be enforced is valid according to the laws of the country in which it was entered into, but whether it is consistent with the laws and policy of the country in which it is sought to be enforced."¹

PART III.
Ch. ix.

§ 479. What constitutes illegality in all the various species of contracts which may exist between man and man is a subject of enormous dimensions, regulated in part by the statute law of the realm, in part by considerations of public policy,² and in part even by the rules which the Courts have adopted for the general protection of all suitors.³ It will be needful here only to enter into the subject so far as it peculiarly affects actions for specific performance.

What constitutes illegality.

§ 480. A defence founded on the illegality of a contract differs in its nature from most other defences: the objection is rather that of the public speaking through the Court, than of the defendant as a party to the action. The law disallows all proceedings in respect of illegal contracts, not from any consideration of the moral position and rights of the parties, but upon grounds of public policy. For if A. and B. enter into a contract for some illegal act to be performed by A., to which both are alike privy, and A. do his part in the business, B. has, it seems, no moral right to refuse performance of his part, provided there be nothing immoral in that part abstracted from the general end of the contract; as, for instance, if, under a contract to ship goods contrary to law, A. ship the goods, B. has no ground in natural equity for refusing to pay the stipulated price: A. and B. were equal in the culpability of the contract, but B. does a fresh wrong by refusing payment:⁴ but it is a wrong

for which no remedy is afforded by the law, for ex dolo malo non oritur actio. “It is not for his (the defendant’s) sake,” said Lord Mansfield C.J., “that the objection is ever allowed; but it is founded on general principles of policy, which the defendant has the advantage of, contrary to the real justice between him and the plaintiff,—by accident, if I may so say.”¹ Where the defendant has received the benefit of the contract, this defence is evidently an unrighteous one, and will accordingly be received by the Court with some degree of disfavour.²

Awards.

§ 481. The principle on which this defence reposes is shown by the cases on the specific performance of awards; for the illegality of the act directed to be done by the award will be a ground for refusing specific performance, although the unreasonableness of the act would be no ground, it being a decision by the judge chosen by the parties.³ It is further illustrated by this, that where, in a suit for specific performance, a fact not put in issue by either party has come out on the evidence affecting the legality of the contract, it has been noticed by the Court, which has not proceeded without directing an inquiry.⁴

How far
the illegality must be made out.

§ 482. As to the clearness of the illegality which will be a bar to specific performance, there is perhaps some slight diversity of expression. In Johnson v. Shrewsbury and Birmingham Railway Co.,⁵ Knight Bruce L.J. laid it down that before the Court would enforce the specific performance of a contract, it must be satisfied that there is not a reasonable ground for contending that the contract is illegal or against the policy of the law: and in another case,¹ Turner L.J. refused to enforce a contract for sale which he held to have been entered into for the purpose of acquiring the right to set aside a transaction for fraud committed on the vendor to the plaintiff: he declined to determine whether the contract was tainted with champerty or maintenance; but held that the right to complain of fraud was not a marketable commodity. But in a case on a contract by a solicitor retiring from a firm, to allow his name to be used after his retirement, Lord Hatherley (then Wood V.C.) observed, "the agreement must be legal or illegal, and it is not within the discretion of the Court to refuse specific performance because an agreement savours of illegality. It must be shown to be illegal."²

§ 483. Where a trust is constituted, designed to give effect to a contract in itself incapable of being enforced, and the trust is in itself perfectly lawful and independent of the contract except so far as that may be necessary to explain the constitution of the trust, there the trust may be enforced, and by means of it the contract incidentally performed. This principle was acted on in the case of Powell v. Knowler,³ before Fortescue M.R., where A. and B. entered into a contract for the division of an estate to be recovered, which was incapable of being enforced on the ground of champerty, and the party who, according to the contract, was to convey part of the estate to the other, by a codicil directed the contract to be carried into execution, and created a trust for that purpose; the trust was specifically enforced against the trustee.

lawful, it may form the consideration for a lawful contract, as, for instance, the actual transfer of stock, the contract for which was illegal.¹ Similarly a trustee into whose hands money is paid on account of a third person cannot set up the illegality of the trust under which the money was so paid, though the cestui que trust could not have enforced his right against the payer directly, as in that case he could only have got at the money through the illegal contract.²

Beadon.*

§ 485. The position of the Court with regard to illegal contracts was thus stated by Jessel M.R. in a recent case.³ “I think,” said his Lordship, “the principle is clear that you cannot directly enforce an illegal contract, and you cannot ask the Court to assist you in carrying it out. You cannot enforce it indirectly; that is, by claiming damages or compensation for the breach of it, or contribution from the persons making the profits realized from it. It does not follow that you cannot, in some cases, recover money paid over to third persons in pursuance of the contract; and it does not follow that you cannot, in other cases, obtain, even from the parties to the contract, moneys which they have become possessed of by representations that the contract was legal, and which belonged to the persons who seek to recover them.”⁴

Trade unions.

§ 486. Trade unions being, apart from the Trade Union Act, 1871, illegal associations, the Court will not, by reason of the terms of section 4 of that Act, at the instance of a member of such an union, enforce a contract contained in its rules for providing benefits for its members.⁵

CHAPTER X.

OF THE CONTRACT BEING ULTRA VIRES.

§ 487. CORPORATIONS created for special purposes have a power to contract, but within certain limits only, and all contracts in excess of their powers, or ultra vires, are void, and therefore necessarily incapable of being enforced in any legal proceeding. This subject has of late years undergone great discussion in respect of contracts by railway and other companies.

PART III.
Ch. x.

Contracts by corporations must be within their powers.

§ 488. A contract entered into by such a corporation in the proper form is primâ facie good, and the onus lies on the person alleging it to be void to show that it is in excess of the corporation's powers, and not on the person relying on it to show that the corporation was authorized to enter into it. Corporations have by law a power to enter into all contracts not expressly or impliedly prohibited;¹ and therefore all corporate bodies are primâ facie bound by contracts under their corporate seals; "but this primâ facie right," said Lord Cranworth, "does not exist in any case where the contract is one which, from the nature and object of incorporation, the corporate body is expressly or impliedly prohibited from making."² "Where a corporation," said Lord Wensleydale,³ "is created by an Act of Parliament for particular purposes, with special powers, their deed, though under their corporate seal, and that regularly affixed, does not bind them, if it appears by the express provisions of the statute creating the corporation, or by necessary or reasonable inference from its enactments, that the deed is ultra vires, that is, that the legislature meant that such a deed should not be made."

*Shrewsbury &c.
Railway
Co. v. L.

§ 489. This doctrine was very fully discussed in a case to which it is proposed now briefly to advert.

In the case of The Shrewsbury and Birmingham Railway Co. v. The London and North-Western Railway Co.,¹ the contract between the companies was briefly to the effect that the North-Western Company should give up to the Shrewsbury Company seven-thirteenths of the profits of the carriage of passengers and goods over a part of the North-Western line, in consideration of receiving, in return, six-thirteenths of the profits made by the Shrewsbury Company on a certain portion of their line. In the course of the protracted litigation which arose out of this contract, opposing opinions were given by the highest authorities as to whether it was ultra vires or not, Lord Cottenham and the Queen's Bench inclining to the opinion of its validity, and Turner L.J. and Lord Cranworth sitting in the House of Lords leaning strongly to the opinion that it was in excess of the powers of the companies. If such a contract was valid as to part of the line, why should it not be valid as to the whole? and if so, there would be no impediment, it was urged, to two companies bringing their funds into a common stock, and dividing them amongst their shareholders in any stipulated proportion.

PART III.
Ch. x.

§ 490. It would be foreign to the objects of this treatise to discuss the very numerous cases which have arisen on this doctrine of ultra vires, involving as they almost always do a careful consideration of the statutes in force with regard to the class of corporations in question, the charter or Act of Parliament or memorandum of association of the particular corporation, and the contract in question in each case.¹

Limitation of the discussion.

§ 491. The question of ultra vires as applicable to corporations must be carefully distinguished from the question of ultra vires as applicable to the agents or officers of those bodies. An act which is beyond the powers of the corporation can never be good and can never be made good by ratification or acquiescence or in any way short of Act of Parliament.² On the other hand, an act which is within the powers of the body but beyond the powers of the board of directors or other managers, may and often does become binding on the corporation by its ratification or acquiescence: and so again acts which are beyond the powers of the managers except on the observance of certain conditions may, if within the powers of the body corporate, be held good by a judicial inference from the conduct of the corporation that the conditions have been observed. The first class of acts are void from the nature of the corporation: the second are objected to as having been beyond the scope of the agent's authority.

Difference between a corporation and

§ 492. Hence it must not be assumed that the question of ultra vires is in all respects the same when it arises between the members of a company and its directors, and when it arises between the company and a third person.

§ 493. Some contracts are of such a nature that every one must know them to be beyond the powers of the corporation with which he is dealing, as e.g., a contract by a railway company to buy a thousand gross of green spectacles, or a contract by a company formed to make a railway from A. to B. for the construction of a railway from C. to D. Such contracts as these are equally void, whether the question arise between the company and a stranger or between members of the corporation. But the case is quite different as regards many other contracts which may or may not be really entered into for the purposes of the company. Directors might buy iron rails not really for the purposes of the line but for speculation. This contract would be void as against the shareholders, but might be perfectly good in favour of the vendor to the company. In short, the mere fact that a contract by the directors is ultra vires, as between them and the shareholders, does not necessarily disentitle the other party to the contract from suing upon it. To do so, it is further necessary that the party suing should have known at the time of the contract that it was intended for a purpose unconnected with the incorporation of the company. The nature of the contract will show this in some cases: in others it will not.¹ required for such purposes; but if he acts bond fide and without knowledge that the land is not so required, or that the transaction is any misapplication of the funds of the company, the contract is binding in his favour, and may be enforced by him in Equity:¹ and the same holds good where the company, really requiring part of an estate, purchase more than is required.²

PART III.
Ch. X.

§ 495. Furthermore a contract will not be void as against a third person dealing bond fide with the corporation, because there may have been the omission to observe some formality required by the terms of its constitution, or because there may have been some irregularity on the part of the directors or officers of the body entering into it on their behalf. Thus for instance it has been held to be no defence to an action against a company upon a debenture sealed with their common seal that the borrowing of the money thereby secured was not sanctioned by the resolution of an extraordinary general meeting as required by its deed of settlement.³

CHAPTER XI.

OF THE STATUTE OF FRAUDS AND THEREIN OF PART PERFORMANCE.

PART III.
Ch. xi.

Fourth section
of the statute.

§ 496. By the 4th section of the Statute of Frauds¹ it is, amongst other things, enacted that no action shall be brought whereby to charge any person upon any contract or sale of lands, tenements, or hereditaments, or any interest in or concerning them, “unless the agreement upon which such action shall be brought, or some memorandum or note thereof, shall be in writing and signed by the party to be charged therewith, or some other person thereunto by him lawfully authorized.”

It follows from this enactment that the plaintiff suing on a contract in relation to land must prove two things—first, that there was in fact a contract concluded between the parties; and secondly, that there is a sufficient note or memorandum of the contract to satisfy the statute. The writings which have passed between the contracting parties may be most important evidence of both these propositions: or, again, some of the writings may show that notwithstanding other writings which, if taken alone, appeared to evidence a contract, there was no contract in fact: or, again, the parol evidence may show that, though there is an apparent memorandum of contract, there was in fact no contract.

The section refers to § 497. As this section affects not the contract itself, but the right of either party to sue the other

¹ 29 Car. II. c. 3.

upon it, it has been decided that it refers not to the solemnities of the contract, but to the procedure, and consequently that an action will not lie in this country on a contract made in a foreign country, and valid there, which, if made here, would have been incapable of being sued on by reason of this section.¹

PART III.
Ch. xi.
the procedure.

This decision, though still law, has not escaped criticism,² and is difficult to reconcile with the well settled rule³ which requires that the writing relied on as taking a case out of the statute should be in existence before action brought; a requirement which would be unreasonable and contrary to the usual practice, if it related only to procedure and did not go to the solemnities of the contract.

§ 498. It is obvious that in many cases a defence to an action for specific performance may be grounded upon this 4th section of the Statute of Frauds. It is therefore proposed to consider (i.) how such a defence may be raised, and (ii.) what constitutes a sufficient agreement or memorandum or note of agreement within the meaning of the statute. And as, notwithstanding the express language of the statute, it was held by the Court of Chancery and is now the law of the land that certain circumstances may preclude a defence founded upon the statute, it is necessary to consider a third question, namely, (iii.) what, according to the principles of Equity, takes a contract out of the statute.

demurrer or plea or answer, or plea and answer, according to circumstances, which it is not now necessary to consider. For by the effect of those statutes and the Rules of the Supreme Court, demurrers, pleas, and answers have all disappeared, and a uniform system of pleading has been introduced into both divisions of the Court.

The present practice.

§ 500. Ord. XIX. r. 20 provides that when a contract is alleged in any pleading, a bare denial of the contract by the opposite party shall be construed only as a denial in fact of the express contract alleged or of the matters of fact from which the same may be implied by law, and not as a denial of the legality or sufficiency in law of such contract, whether with reference to the Statute of Frauds or otherwise.

Again, Order XIX. r. 15 refers to the Statute of Frauds as one of the things which must be expressly raised by the pleadings of the party who desires to obtain its benefit.

Benefit of statute must be claimed.

§ 501. In cases, therefore, in which pleadings exist the Statute of Frauds must be expressly raised by the pleading of the person who seeks to use it as a defence. In any case arising under proceedings in a summary manner where there are no pleadings, the statute should be set up by affidavit or otherwise as the circumstances may admit.

How to be claimed.

§ 502. It is not necessary that the defendant should claim the benefit in the very words of the statute, but he must claim it in words equivalent, so as to call the attention of the other party to the circumstance that the benefit of the statute is claimed.¹

Where defendant makes default in pleading.

§ 503. If the plaintiff deliver a statement of claim, and the defendant deliver no defence, it appears clear that the defendant cannot set up the statute at the hearing of the plaintiff's motion for judgment, for then the Court is to give such judgment as upon the statement of claim the Court shall consider the plaintiff to be entitled to.¹

ii. What satisfies the statute.

§ 504. The object of the Statute of Frauds being, as regards the contracts now under consideration, to prevent the mischief arising from the resort to parol evidence to prove the existence and the terms of the alleged contract, it is obvious that the mischief is avoided wherever there exists, under the hand of the party sought to be charged, a written statement containing, either expressly or by necessary inference, all the terms of the contract,—that is to say, the parties (described either by names or descriptions or reference sufficient to preclude any fair dispute as to their identity),² the subject-matter of the contract,³ the consideration, and the promise,⁴—and leaving nothing open to future treaty.⁵

Written statement.

§ 505. This therefore is sufficient to satisfy the statute, and provided this be found, no formality is required, nor does it signify at all what is the nature or character of the document containing such written statement,—whether it be a letter written by the party to be charged to the person with whom he contracted, or to any other person, or a deed, or other legal instrument, or an affidavit.⁶

upon, and therefore what is necessary to be expressed, in order that a written memorandum shall be evidence of a completed contract, will be found more fully discussed in the chapter¹ on the Incompleteness of the contract.

The writing must express a concluded contract existing at the time when the memorandum was signed.

§ 506. There is of course no binding contract when the writing appears only to be terms agreed on as a basis for a contract, and not the contract itself;² or where it provides that any of the terms are afterwards to be settled,³ or where the matter is unconcluded, and one party may still withdraw his consent;⁴ or where there appears any design of further negotiation;⁵ or where one of the parties was at the time when the memorandum was signed—which is the point of time at which the statute requires the plaintiff to prove a concluded contract existing⁶—incapable of contracting bindingly.⁷ Therefore where the purchaser's solicitor offered £25,000 for the purchase of an estate, which the defendant's agent accepted, "subject to the terms of a contract being arranged between his [the vendor's] solicitor and yourself," the Court considered this to be a contract to enter into a contract with respect to which some terms were already agreed on, and the rest were to be settled by future arrangement, and that if they could be agreed on, this was to become a valid contract: but such a contract never having been come to, the Court dismissed the purchaser's bill asking for a specific performance.⁸ On

§ 507. The Court will refuse to act even where it only “rests reasonably doubtful whether what passed was only treaty, let the progress towards the confines of agreement be more or less.”²

only.

§ 508. But the mere fact, though appearing on the paper, that a more formal contract is intended to be executed, will not prevent a paper duly signed and containing all the terms from being a contract, any more than will a reference to deeds thereafter to be executed.³ Therefore where A. wrote to B., “I offer you £3,000 for the estate,” and B. replied, “I accept your offer, and if you approve of the inclosed, sign the same, and I will on receipt of the deposit sign you a copy,” (the inclosure was not produced), the Court held that there was a binding contract, and treated the inclosure as a mere means of carrying that contract into effect:⁴ and in another case, a correspondence about the taking of a house was held to constitute a sufficient contract, though the agent of the lessor accepted the offer thus, “These terms I have submitted to Mrs. S., and I am authorized to say they are accepted, and that her solicitor will draw up a proper agreement for signature, which I will forward to you.”⁵

Winn v. Bull, 7 Ch. D. 29. Whether the expression in the memorandum that the contract is subject to the approval of the title by the purchaser’s solicitor is enough to make the contract conditional appears doubtful. § 509. But wherever the formal contract contemplated is to be anything more than merely ancillary to the real contract,—wherever any new term not expressed or implied in the earlier contract might be introduced into the formal one, the first document will not by itself be binding. And wherever the concluded nature of the arrangement does not evidently appear on the writings, the fact that a subsequent and more formal contract was entered into will be strong evidence that the previous negotiations were not intended to amount to a contract.¹

Chinnock v.
The Marchioness of Ely.

§ 510. In the case of *Chinnock v. The Marchioness of Ely*² the plaintiff had proposed certain terms of purchase to the defendant's agents, who had replied to the plaintiff that they were instructed by their client to proceed with the sale to him, and that a draft contract was being prepared and would be forwarded to him for approval in a few days. It was contended on the plaintiff's behalf that this letter clearly recognized the fact that there had been a complete sale to him, and also amounted to a distinct acceptance of certain terms previously stated by him in writing. But it was held by Lord Westbury that the true meaning of the letter was that the defendant was willing to accept the plaintiff's terms, if the plaintiff would agree to the draft contract about to be sent to him. "I entirely accept," said his Lordship,³ "the doctrine contended for by the plaintiff's Counsel, and for which they cited the cases of Fowle v. Freeman,⁴ Kennedy v. Lee,⁵ and Thomas v. Dering,⁶ which establish, that if there had been a final agreement, and the terms of it are evidenced in a manner to satisfy the Statute of Frauds, the agreement shall be binding, although the parties may have declared that the writing is to serve only as instructions for a formal agreement, or although it may be an express term that a formal agreement shall be prepared and signed by the parties. As soon as the fact is established of the final mutual assent of the parties to certain terms, and those terms are evidenced by any writing signed by the party to be charged or his agent lawfully authorized, there exist all the materials, which this Court requires, to make a legally binding contract. But if to a proposal or offer an assent be given subject to a provision as to a contract, then the stipulation as to the contract is a term of the assent, and there is no agreement independent of that stipulation."

The law stated by Jessel
M.R.

"It comes, therefore, to this, that where you have a proposal or agreement made in writing expressed to be subject to a formal contract being prepared, it means what it says; it is subject to and is dependent upon a formal contract being prepared. When it is not expressly stated to be subject to a formal contract it becomes a question of construction, whether the parties intended that the terms agreed on should merely be put into form, or whether they should be subject to a new agreement the terms of which are not expressed in detail."

In that case accordingly a writing purporting to be a contract for a loan, but expressed to be "made subject to the preparation and approval of a formal contract," was held not to be a concluded contract.²

ture by the party against whom the contract is sought to be enforced is sufficient. PART III.
Ch. xi.

§ 516. The statute requires a signature and not a subscription;¹ therefore all that is requisite to satisfy the statute as to the signature is, that the name be inserted by the party in such a manner as to govern and authenticate the entire instrument. Accordingly, a letter beginning "Mr. Foljambe presents his compliments" was held duly signed.² The same was the case where A. wrote "A. has agreed," &c.;³ and where B. wrote "A. agreed with B.," &c.⁴ An affidavit made by a person has been also held sufficient.⁵ Signature.

§ 517. The signature must be the actual writing of the name, or the doing of some act intended by the person to be equivalent to the actual signature of the name, such as the mark by a marksman. Therefore a letter beginning "My dear Robert," and concluding with the words "Do me the justice to believe me the most affectionate of mothers," was held not to be signed within the statute.⁶ Must be

name.

§ 518. A signature in pencil is not necessarily deliberative, and may be equally binding within the statute as one in ink.⁷ And even a printed name may avail; so that where a vendor inserted in a printed invoice with his name on it the name of the purchaser, it was held that there was such a ratification and adoption of the printed name as made it a signature, and satisfied the statute.⁸ In like manner a stamp may no doubt be used for the purpose of signing.⁹ In pencil.

Initials. It seems too that the setting down of the initials may be a sufficient signature.²

How far intent to sign necessary.

§ 519. It cannot be denied that there is some conflict of authority on the question how far the writing of his name by the party must be with the intent of signing. There is authority for the proposition that such a writing, even with a different intent, may amount to a binding signature. "It has been decided," said Lord Eldon (then Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas), "that if a man draw up an agreement in his own handwriting, beginning 'I, A. B. agree, &c.,' and leave a place for a signature at the bottom, but never sign it, it may be considered as a note or memorandum in writing within the statute. And yet it is impossible not to see that the insertion of the name at the beginning was not intended to be a signature, and that the paper was meant to be incomplete until it was further signed;"³ and in a subsequent case his Lordship said: "It is true, that, where a party, or principal, or person to be bound, signs as, what he cannot be, a witness, he cannot be understood to sign otherwise than as principal."⁴

⁴ Coles v. Trecothick, 9 Ves. at p. 251. In Welford v. Beazeley (3 Atk. 503) it appears that the person who subscribed the articles as witness, and was held bound by the signature, was not a party to the articles.

PART III.
Ch. xi.

But in other cases the Courts have had regard to the intention of the writing alleged to operate as a signature. The Court of Queen's Bench on this ground held that a person capable of being a witness, and signing as such, will not be bound by the instrument as a party, or as agent of a party:¹ and where the names were written at the beginning of a paper embodying a contract which concluded with the words "as witness our hands," and no signatures followed, it was considered by the Court of Common Pleas not to satisfy the statute, because the concluding words evidently showed an intention that the paper should be signed at the foot.²

§ 520. Some points however are clear. It is clear that the incidental introduction of his name by the party to be charged for some distinct and different purpose will not do: as where A. wrote on a memorandum for a lease the words "the rent to be paid to A.:" it was held to be no signature by him.³

Incidental introduction of name for different purpose.

"I adhere," said Lord Selborne in the House of Lords,⁴ "to what I said, when sitting in the Court of Chancery, in the case of Jervis v. Berridge,⁵ that the Statute of Frauds 'is a weapon of defence, not offence,' and 'does not make any signed instrument a valid contract by reason of the signature, if it is not such according to the good faith and real intention of the parties.'"

The statute a weapon of defence, not offence.

§ 521. The same principle was affirmed by the House of Lords in the case of Caton v. Caton,⁶ where specific performance was sought of certain heads of arrangement set out in a written memorandum and there called "conditions as a basis for a marriage settlement mutually agreed upon in the event of marriage between the undermentioned parties;" the parties so referred to being the plaintiff, then a widow, and the writer of the memorandum, who subsequently became her husband, and whose estate was sought to be charged. The document was not signed by the writer, but his name and initials appeared incidentally in several parts of it; and it was argued for the plaintiff that his name and initials, occurring as they did below the words "undermentioned parties," were sufficiently connected with those words to enable the Court to treat the document as a memorandum signed by him within the statute. The argument however was unsuccessful. "If," said Lord Westbury, in the course of his speech,¹ "a signature be found in an instrument incidentally only or having relation and reference only to a portion of the instrument, the signature cannot have that legal effect and force which it must have in order to comply with the statute, and to give authenticity to the whole of the memorandum."

Actual

document.

§ 522. On the other hand, it seems that if there be an actual signature written with the intention of signing or authenticating the document, it is not the less operative because the signature was attached for a purpose different from that of satisfying the statute.² Thus, in a recent case in the Queen's Bench Division, the signature by the chairman of a board of directors in their minute book, pursuant to the 67th section of the Companies Act, 1862, of a resolution of the board to the effect that a particular draft contract should be engrossed and executed, was held to operate as a sufficient signature within the statute, so as to bind

the company to an admission of the contract, notwithstanding that the chairman's signature had been put to the minute merely in order to verify its accuracy and without any intention of attesting or verifying the contract.¹ "The question," said Lush J. in delivering the judgment of the Court, "is not what its [the minute's] object was, but whether it was a written and signed statement of the contract."²

§ 523. But in another case, that of Eley v. The Positive Government Security Life Assurance Co.,³ the question being whether a clause contained in the Articles of Association of a company, to the effect that a particular person should be the solicitor of the company, was a contract with this person, the Judges of the Exchequer Division held that if it was such a contract at all, the signatures affixed to the Articles having been affixed alio intuitu could not satisfy the statute. In the Court above⁴ the case was disposed of irrespective of the statute, on the ground that the Articles of Association were a matter between the shareholders inter se or the shareholders and the directors, and did not create any contract between the solicitor and the company.

Eley v. The Positive &c. Assurance Co.

§ 524. It is submitted that no writing of a name at the beginning, or end, or in the course of a paper, is a signature within the statute, unless the Court conclude that it was there placed with the intention of authenticating the entire paper: but that if there be such a writing of a name, it is immaterial whether the signature was attached with the intention of evidencing the contract or for any other purpose whatever. All motives, objects, and purposes beyond that of authenticating the paper are immaterial.⁵

Agent.

§ 525. Where the contract purports to be signed by an agent, it must be alleged and proved by the plaintiff that the person who signed as agent was authorized to act as agent for the purpose of concluding a binding contract of the nature of the contract set up.¹ It is not enough in the case of a sale that the agent was appointed to negotiate for a sale: it is not enough that he was appointed as the person to whom intending purchasers were to apply to treat and see the property:² and further it has been held that a written request by the owner of freeholds to procure a purchaser for them, and to advertise them at a certain price, is no authority to enter into an open contract of sale, and is probably no authority to contract for sale at all.³

How appointed.

§ 526. As the statute does not require an agent for signing a contract to be appointed in writing, the general law applies in such cases, and consequently the appointment may be made as well by parol as by writing.⁴

Where the Court will conclude in favour of the agency.

1. Direct evidence.

2. Inference.

§ 527. The Court may conclude in favour of the agency in any of the following ways:—

(1.) The Court may come to this conclusion from direct evidence, oral or written, of the appointment; or,

(2.) By inference from the acts, letters, or conduct of the parties, or from their relations to one another, or, in short, from any evidence legitimately raising the inference of agency.⁵

(3.) An alleged principal, though he may in fact have given no authority to the alleged agent, may by representations which he has made to the other party, or by inducing him to lay out money on the faith of the alleged agency, be estopped from denying the agency.¹

PART III.
Ch. xi.

3. Representation.

(4.) Ratification may take the place of agency. Here the maxim applies, omnis ratihabitio retrotrahitur et mandato æquiparatur, and therefore the subsequent ratification of a contract, entered into by a person then unauthorized as agent, takes it out of the statute;² and this ratification need not be by any express act; it is enough if the party whose authority is required take the benefit of the contract, or even if, with a full knowledge of it, he passively acquiesce in it for a length of time longer than that reasonably to be allowed for the expression of dissent.³ But it will not be implied from vague expressions to a third person.⁴

4. Ratification.

§ 528. For a valid ratification it is necessary that the person who ratifies the contract should have been in existence at its date;⁵ and further, that he should be the person in whose name the agent has professed to act.⁶ Thus, where the pretended agent professed to contract in writing on behalf of a married woman, it was held that the husband could not ratify the

§ 529. It is now clearly decided that, at sales by auction, auctioneers are agents of the purchaser as well as of the vendor.² This conclusion seems to have been arrived at from the necessity of the case, and the peculiar nature of the mode of sale.³ “The nature of the proceeding by auction,—” said Lord Langdale M.R.,⁴ “the bidding for the purpose of making the purchase—the necessity of making a statement of the bidding—the direction to the auctioneer to write down the bidding, which is perhaps involved in the very process of bidding, and some other circumstances, afford intelligible ground for the decision in Emmerson v. Heelis,⁵ and the approbation which has since been bestowed upon it.” Where this necessity does not exist, as in a subsequent purchase in private from the auctioneer, no such agency arises.⁶ But where, after an unsuccessful sale by auction, but before the auctioneer had left the rostrum, a purchaser ascertained from the auctioneer’s clerk the amount of the reserved bidding, and agreed to take the property at that price, and signed a bidding paper for it, but subsequently denied the authority of the auctioneer to act as the vendors’ agent, it was held impossible for him to contend that the sale ought not to be treated as one by auction.⁷

§ 531. As an agent may not without express authority delegate his authority to another, an auctioneer cannot without permission appoint another to conduct the sale,³ and, for the same reason, the clerks of agents are not agents for the principal, unless the principal has assented to their acting as such.⁴ The auctioneer's clerk at an auction has not by custom authority as the purchaser's agent to enter his name at the time of the sale in a book,⁵ but it may be shown that the purchaser, by word, sign, or otherwise, authorized the making of such entry:⁶ and even in the absence of any proof of such authority, there appears to be general custom investing the auctioneer's clerk with it.⁶

The authority of an agent may be revoked at any time before it is acted upon, and such revocation may be proved by parol.³ But where the agent has been habitually employed, and so held out by the principal as such, the latter will be bound by his acts, if within the scope of his former authority, until reasonable notice of its revocation.⁴

such evidence of the contract as the statute requires. It may be convenient to consider these cases under the following heads, viz.: (1.) where there is an unsigned writing containing all the terms of the contract, and the letters are adduced as incorporating that writing, and furnishing the signature of one or both of the parties; (2) where the principal writing is incomplete in one or more of its terms, and the letters are referred to to supplement the defect; and (3) where they are adduced as themselves constituting the contract and the written evidence of it.

§ 538. (1.) In order to make a contract binding under the Statute of Frauds, it is not necessary that it should be all contained in one paper, signed by the party to be charged; but the terms of the contract may be contained in one paper, and the signature may be found in some other paper, provided that such second paper refer to the paper which does contain the terms.¹

1. Letters referred to for signature.

§ 539. For the ascertainment and identification of the actual paper referred to, parol evidence is admissible:² for the one paper cannot be physically contained in the other paper. In the same way, in the case of a bequest in a will, the thing given and the person to whom it is given must be mentioned in the instrument, but the actual identification of the thing and the person must, from the nature of the case, be dehors the instrument, and therefore a matter of parol evidence.³

Parol evidence admitted.

therefore, where the contract made no reference to an advertisement respecting the property which was sought to be introduced to supply a term, it was held that this could not be done:¹ and so also the mere admission in writing of a contract, without ascertaining its terms, is inoperative.²

To terms
in writing.

§ 541. Further, the reference must be to terms in writing: therefore where a writing duly signed referred not to a writing, but to terms arranged by parol, there was no valid contract.³ But the terms, if in fact in writing, need not appear on the face of the other paper to be so: so that a reference in one paper to "terms agreed on," when in fact the only terms agreed on were in writing, was held sufficient.⁴

How far

ference

§ 542. Whether the reference must be express and on the face of the paper containing the signature, or whether it be enough that a jury or judge of fact would conclude from the circumstances and contents that the two papers are parts of one correspondence, may be open to doubt. The latter is probably the better view.

Is parol

ments?

§ 543. Another question does not seem free from controversy. Is it the rule that the two papers must be such that the judge of fact would connect them without the aid of verbal evidence,⁵ or that verbal evidence may be given not only to identify, but to connect them?⁶

§ 545. In Tawney v. Crowther,² the contract was reduced into writing, and was in possession of the defendant, who, in answer to a letter from the plaintiff's solicitor, asking him to meet him and sign the contract, wrote a letter, in which he mentioned his having been from home, acknowledged having said his word should be as good as his bond, and that there was time enough before Michaelmas to settle everything; and again said "that his word should always be as good as any security he could give:" Lord Thurlow, first on a plea of the statute, and subsequently on the answer, which insisted on the statute, held that the letters and the paper together constituted a valid contract. "If a letter cannot be referred to the agreement," said his Lordship, "or does not contain proper terms, I cannot treat it as out of the statute; but I confess, on what appears here, the papers do refer to that agreement, and contain a promise to perform it; the defendant did intend by the letter to raise a confidence that the agreement should be performed."³ Lord Redesdale has expressed his disapprobation of this case, considering that the promise was intended to be of an honorary and not of a legal and binding nature;⁴ and the correctness of the decision has been questioned by Lords Cranworth and Brougham in the case of Ridgway v. Wharton.⁵ From the note at the end of the case in Brown's Reports⁶ it appears that the decree was by consent.

§ 546. In another case, the defendants' letters referred distinctly to the conditions of sale, which were in their hands, signed by the plaintiff, and the Court of Queen's Bench held that no parol evidence was necessary to connect the two, and that there was a binding contract.¹ And where A. wrote to B., proposing to let a public-house on certain terms, and B.'s clerk met A. and discussed the terms of the lease, and afterwards B. replied that he was willing to take the premises of A., this was held to refer to the terms contained in A.'s letter, and therefore to constitute a contract.²

2. Letters to supply
a term.

§ 547. (2.) Letters may be used to supply a term wanting in the principal writing; thus where, in a memorandum, the lessor's name was not mentioned, and subsequently a letter from the lessee, referring to this document, mentioned his (the lessor's) name in a manner from which the Court could imply that he was lessor, there was held to be sufficient evidence of the contract.³ But where⁴ two persons came to a verbal agreement for the sale and purchase of an estate, and the vendor thereupon signed and handed to the purchaser a memorandum of the particulars of the property and the price, which however did not contain the purchaser's name; and afterwards the vendor signed and sent to the purchaser a letter, saying, "I am about to relet the land at S. The Lady Day rents will be mine and the Michaelmas yours;" it was held that the defect in the memorandum was not supplied by the letter.

as constituting the
contract.

§ 549. It is one of the first principles of a case of this kind that where the contract, or the note or memorandum of the terms of the contract, has to be found in letters, the whole of the correspondence which has passed must be taken into account.² Accordingly, in a case where the first two letters of a correspondence, taken by themselves, appeared to amount to a complete contract, but there really were other terms, which when those letters were written were unsettled and in the result remained unsettled, the House of Lords held that there was no concluded contract.³

The correspond-ence must be considered as a whole.

§ 550. There are many reasons to recommend this rule as to the consideration of the whole of the correspondence. The subsequent letters may show that at the time of the supposed contract there was on neither side that intention to contract which is of the essence of a contract: or again, the correspondence may show a subsequent agreement to vary or rescind an agreement previously made.

“I think,” said Sir Geo. Jessel M.R.,⁴ “that it very often happens that both parties use expressions in letters which read alone would amount to a contract, if we did not know that in fact neither of the parties intended those general expressions to constitute a contract.”

§ 551. The effect of subsequent letters may perhaps be thus stated. If the subsequent correspondence leads to the conclusion that at the date of the letters relied on as the memoranda of the contract there was no contract in fact, then the plaintiff must fail: if, on the other hand, the whole evidence shows that at that date there was a consensus between the parties upon the terms expressed in the letters relied upon, then the subsequent correspondence, unless amounting to a new contract or an agreement for rescission, can have no effect upon the existence of the contract.

Effect of conduct on letters.

§ 552. The influence of subsequent correspondence has been carried very far in the case of the Bristol, Cardiff, and Swansea Aërated Bread Co. v. Maggs,¹ where Kay J. held that the plaintiff was precluded from relying on letters as evidence of a contract, not because at the date of those letters there was no contract, but because the plaintiff's solicitor subsequently began a negotiation with a view to introduce new terms. "Having treated these two letters," said the learned judge, "as part of an incomplete bargain, it would be most inequitable to allow them to say, 'Although we thus treated the matter as incomplete and a negotiation only, yet the defendant had no right to do so, but was bound by a completed contract.'"²

The case, therefore, is put not on the non-existence of the contract in fact, but upon an equitable estoppel resulting from the subsequent negotiation by the plaintiff's solicitor. This proposition seems worthy of further discussion. A new negotiation for a new term does not seem necessarily to involve the desire to rescind or abandon an existing contract, nor is it conclusive evidence that no contract had in fact been previously entered into.

² At p. 625.

§ 553. In Bellamy v. Debenham,¹ North J. discussed the language used by Kay J. in Bristol, &c. Bread Co v. Maggs, and said: "In my opinion, subsequent negotiations, first commenced on new points after a complete contract in itself has been signed, cannot be regarded as constituting part of the negotiations going on at the time when it was signed." This seems to be good law. It would seem clear that if the letters of proposal and acceptance in fact contain all the terms agreed on at the time, and were written with the intent of binding the writers, this complete contract could not be affected by subsequent negotiations not resulting in a new contract.

§ 554. The plaintiff cannot insist on some terms or some letters and reject others.² If the letters taken as a whole do not constitute the contract, the plaintiff must fail.³

Parts of letters not available.

§ 555. The contract may even be sufficiently evidenced by a letter addressed to a third person, provided it ascertain the terms of the contract.⁴

Letter to third person.

§ 556. It is desirable to consider the effect of letters which repudiate or disown a contract referred to in them. Where the letters deny that a contract ever existed, it would seem impossible to treat them as the evidence or an admission of a contract; but where the letters repudiate on the ground of matter subsequent, as for example, of damage done to goods bought, there a statement of the terms of the contract in the letters may satisfy the statute.⁵

Warner v.
Willington.

§ 557. The subject was discussed in the case of Warner v. Willington,¹ before Kindersley V.C. In that case there was a memorandum for a lease, signed by the defendant, the proposed lessee, but deficient in the lessor's name, and then a letter by the defendant, withdrawing the memorandum, but referring to the lessor's name: and the Vice-Chancellor held that the letter supplied the original defect in the memorandum, and converted it into a contract binding under the statute. It is submitted that this decision is not without difficulties on principle; for it would seem that the whole letter must be looked at, and then that affirms the memorandum to be, what in fact without the letter it was, namely, a mere offer: and, further, the case appears difficult to reconcile with other decisions. Thus, where buyers have written letters distinctly referring to invoices of the goods, but insisting that they were not bound to accept the goods, and thus repudiating the contract, the Courts have held that there is no sufficient writing within the 17th section of the Statute of Frauds:² and in a case in the Exchequer, in which Warner v. Willington was cited, the Court considered that it would be treating the Statute of Frauds as nothing, if a letter, merely declining to accept goods under a parol contract or an insufficient written contract, were held to take the case out of the statute.³ And again, in a case in Chancery, Turner L.J. treated the argument that a letter declining to enter into a contract could constitute one as too strained to require any observation.⁴ contract after marriage, in pursuance of a parol one before, takes the case out of the statute.¹

PART III.
Ch. xi.

§ 559. With regard to the mode in which a contract within the statute should be pleaded, the Rules of Court under the Judicature Acts have swept away the diversity which existed in the pleadings at Common Law and in Chancery. An allegation of a contract is sufficient without stating it to be in writing, and the defendant who admits the contract in fact, but denies its sufficiency with regard to the statute, must specially raise the point by his defence.²

Pleading
a contract within the statute.

§ 560. Another important provision of the Rules is to the effect that where a contract is to be implied from a series of letters or conversations or otherwise from a number of circumstances, it is sufficient in pleading to allege such contract as a fact and to refer generally to such letters, conversations, or circumstances without setting them out in detail; and that if in such a case the person so pleading desires to rely in the alternative upon more contracts than one, as to be implied from such circumstances, he may state the same in the alternative.³

iii. What takes a contract out of the statute.

§ 561. Courts of Equity hold that, notwithstanding the express language of the statute, a case may be taken out of its operation by any one of the following circumstances:—(1.) by the sale being by the Court, (2.) by an admission in the defence of a contract in fact, where the defence does not insist on the statute, (3.) by fraud,¹ and (4.) by a parol contract and part performance, which is, as we shall see, but a particular case of fraud. In the two first cases the reason is that the danger of that which the statute was meant to guard against does not arise, and in the third and fourth that the statute shall not be made use of to cover a fraud.

1. Sale by the Court.

§ 562. (1.) It was held that a sale in the Court of Chancery by private contract, in pursuance of an order confirming a Master's report, was exempted from the Statute of Frauds, and consequently might be enforced against the representative of a purchaser who had not signed it.² The considerations upon which this decision was based are that the judicial character of the proceeding is such as to prevent the hazard of uncertainty and perjury which the statute was intended to prevent, and moreover that, in such a case, the purchaser, having been a party to the proceedings in which the order for sale to him was made, is bound by the order, and would be guilty of contempt in refusing to pay the purchase-money.

Ordinary sale by auction.

§ 563. The same rule was held to apply to sales in the ordinary way by auction before a master,³ and would no doubt apply to sales under the present practice;⁴ but not to ordinary sales by public auction; because, it is said, such sales might be without written or printed particulars and conditions, and also, no doubt, because they are in no way proceedings connected with the Court.⁵

2. Admissions in pleadings.

§ 564. (2.) An admission of a parol contract in the answer of a defendant to the bill of complaint was, under the old practice, held to take the case out of the statute where the answer did not insist upon the statute, and this because the admission took the case out of the mischief which the statute was designed to remedy.¹ Another reason suggested for the rule was that the contract, though originally in parol, was, after admission, evidenced by writing under the signature of the party, which would be a sufficient compliance with the statute as interpreted by the decided cases.²

§ 565 The substantial result of the present system of pleading is to continue this effect of an admission of the contract in fact, and furthermore to treat the contract as admitted unless it is actually denied. For it results from the Rules of Court³ that if the contract be not expressly denied to exist in fact, and expressly stated not to satisfy the Statute of Frauds, it will be held that the defendant has admitted both its existence and its sufficiency to satisfy the statute.

Effect of admissions under present practice.

§ 566. In the case of the death before judgment of the person making such an admission, his representatives will be bound by his admission on being made parties to the action.⁴ But the admission by a vendor that he had contracted to sell an estate to a person since deceased will not bind the personal representatives of such deceased purchaser; nor will an admission by a purchaser that he had contracted to buy an estate bind the real representatives of the alleged vendor: for it is now clearly settled that, in order to entitle the real or personal representative to enforce the execution of a contract to the prejudice of the other, there must have been, at the death of the deceased contractor, a contract by which he was legally bound, and which the Court would have compelled him specifically to execute; and it is consequently open to any of the parties interested, notwithstanding the admissions or submissions of any of the other parties, to take every objection which the deceased might himself have taken if living.¹ Thus the admission of a contract by the executors of a testator will not bind the residuary legatee.²

3. Fraud.

§ 567. (3.) The principle upon which the Court regards fraud as forming an exception to the statute was stated by Lord Eldon as follows: "Upon the Statute of Frauds, though declaring that interests shall not be bound except by writing, cases in this Court are perfectly familiar deciding that a fraudulent use shall not be made of that statute; where this Court has interfered against a party meaning to make it an instrument of fraud, and said he should not take advantage of his own fraud even though the statute has declared that in case those circumstances do not exist, the instrument shall be absolutely void. One instance is the case of instructions upon a treaty of marriage: the conveyance being absolute, but subject to an agreement for a defeasance, which, though not appearing by the contents of the conveyance, can be proved aliunde: and there are many other instances."³

Collateral
contract.

§ 568. Thus, if it can be shown that the written contract which is sought to be enforced was only signed in consequence of some collateral contract having been come to, the plaintiff must either submit to the collateral contract or have his action for specific performance dismissed; and this although the collateral contract is not evidenced in writing. Thus, in Clarke v. Grant,¹ where trustees of a charity sought specific performance of a written contract to take a lease, and the main defence was a parol contract of the same date as the written one and affecting the parcels, Grant M.R. held that evidence to prove the parol contract was admissible, and that, if it were proved, it would be against equity and a fraud on the defendant to insist upon his performance of a contract, which he had only signed on the faith of an alteration being made in one of its terms.

§ 569. In the last-mentioned case the defendant set up the collateral contract: but the cases go much further and show that the plaintiff may, on the ground of fraud, obtain the benefit of a collateral parol promise which the person who claims under the written contract fraudulently refuses to recognize. In one case Lord Thurlow allowed the plaintiff to give parol evidence that, at the time the contract (which was subsequently reduced to writing) was entered into, an undertaking had been given by the assignee of the lease to the assignor for indemnity against the rents and covenants; his Lordship laying down that "where the objection is taken before the party execute the agreement and the other side promise to ratify it, it is to be considered a fraud on the party if such promise is not kept."²

Fraudulent refusal to recognize collateral parol promise.

§ 570. So in the case of transactions which are really for mortgages or charges, if the written instrument be in terms absolute and have been obtained on a promise to execute a defeasance, or if the clause for redemption have been fraudulently omitted, the mortgagor or chargor has been allowed to come to the Court and to reduce the absolute conveyance to a mortgage or charge.¹

Jervis v. Berridge.

§ 571. So again, in Jervis v. Berridge,² where the plaintiffs assigned the benefit of a contract to the defendant upon certain terms, some only of which were reduced into writing, it was held that, under the circumstances of the case, the memorandum was only ancillary to the verbal contract, and any use of it by the defendant for a purpose inconsistent with the verbal contract was fraudulent. Lord Selborne in the course of his judgment³ stated the principle now in discussion in words which have already been quoted.⁴

Trustee for real purchaser.

§ 572. So again, if A. have in his hands money of B. and at B.'s request lay it out in the purchase of an estate, A. cannot, on the ground that the land is conveyed to him, claim the estate as his own and exclude parol evidence that he was a trustee for B.⁵

The principle of the foregoing cases.

§ 573. In all these cases, to exclude parol evidence and to adjudge specific performance of the contract as evidenced by the writing alone, would be to work the very mischief which the statute was intended to prevent; viz., to fix the party sought to be charged with a contract which he never in fact entered into.

Fraud in relation to marriage articles.

§ 574. So again, the want of writing could not be set up successfully by a man who had fraudulently prevented the writing from coming into existence.¹ Thus where the defendant, on a treaty for the marriage of his daughter with the plaintiff, signed a paper comprising the terms of the agreement arrived at, but afterwards, and with a view to rid himself of the obligation imposed by it, induced his daughter to wheedle the plaintiff to give up the writing and then to marry her,—the plaintiff was held entitled to relief and obtained a decree on the ground of fraud.²

§ 575. But this want of writing must be due to fraud and not to mere non-performance of a contract to sign a writing. No doubt the opposite view was formerly taken, and it was thought, that an allegation that it was part of the parol contract between the contracting parties that the contract should be reduced into writing would take the case out of the statute, on the ground of fraud. Accordingly, where a bill containing such an allegation was met by a plea of the statute, Lord North, after argument, ordered the defendant to answer so much of the bill only as charged that the contract was to be put into writing.³ It seems obvious, however, that such a procedure affords a most easy means of evading the intention of the statute, and introducing the mischief it was designed to remedy: and accordingly, the law is clearly established, that such an allegation does not withdraw the case from the operation of the statute, and that, after a parol contract, a refusal to sign a written one is no fraud of which the Court can take cognizance.⁴

Mere non-performance of contract to sign a document.

contract.

§ 576. The same principle as regards fraud was once considered to apply to marriage contracts, which also are within the 4th section of the statute. In Dundas v. Dutens,¹ Lord Thurlow decided that a post-nuptial settlement recited to be made in pursuance of an ante-nuptial parol contract was not a voluntary settlement, and that because a refusal to perform the previous contract would have been a fraud; but this decision is in effect overruled by the case of Warden v. Jones,² where Lord Cranworth remarked that, were the decision in Dundas v. Dutens correct, the whole policy of the statute would be defeated.³

Wills.

§ 577. In cases of wills obtained by a promise to dispose of the property in a particular way, the Court will, notwithstanding the language of the Statute of Frauds that every will must be in writing, and the language of the Wills Act to the same effect, give effect to the verbal arrangement by raising a trust on the property devised or bequeathed by the will.⁴

4. Of part performance.

§ 578. (4.) The part performance of a contract by one of the parties to it may, in the contemplation of Equity, preclude the other party from setting up the Statute of Frauds, and thus render it, although merely resting in parol, capable of being enforced by way of specific performance, though not by way of damages, even since the Judicature Acts.⁵

The principle of the exception.

§ 579. This exception seems to be based on the view that if a man have made a bargain with another, and allowed that other to act upon it, he may have created an equity against himself which he cannot resist by setting up the want of a formality in the evidence of the contract out of which the Equity in part arose.¹ The principle is not unknown to the law of Scotland,² and seems to be the same as that which gave rise to the real contract in Roman Law,—a contract in which the connection between the parties was clothed with obligation, and so ceased to be nudum pactum, by force of the actual delivery of the subject of the contract. “In the real contract,” says Sir Henry Maine, “performance on one side is allowed to impose a legal duty on the other, evidently on ethical grounds.”³

§ 580. In order thus to withdraw a contract from the operation of the statute, several circumstances must concur: 1st, the acts of part performance must be such as not only to be referable to a contract such as that alleged, but to be referable to no other title; 2ndly, they must be such as to render it a fraud in the defendant to take advantage of the contract not being in writing; 3rdly, the contract to which they refer must be such as in its own nature is enforceable by the Court; and 4thly, there must be proper parol evidence of the contract which is let in by the acts of part performance. Essentials.

§ 581. First, “the acts relied upon as part performance must be unequivocally and in their own nature referable to some such agreement as that alleged.”⁴ But if the acts go as far as this, they are admissible, for it seems evident that all that can be gathered from acts of part performance is the existence of some contract in pursuance of which they are done, and the general character of the contract: they cannot, unless possibly in some very singular case, be themselves sufficient evidence of the particular contract alleged, because they cannot in themselves show all i. The acts must refer to a contract.

the terms of the contract from which they flow. They may be evidence of an unknown contract, but the making known what that contract is must be the result of the evidence which the acts in question are allowed to introduce.¹ It cannot be denied that there is some want of exactitude in the statements sometimes made in this respect, as, for instance, where it is said that the acts must be referable to the alleged contract: and Lord Redesdale seems to have held that, to admit parol evidence, the part performance must be such as to show the very same contract as the plaintiff alleged. So that in a case where the plaintiff stated a parol contract for a lease for three lives, and payment of rent in part performance, and the defendant admitted a contract, but for one life and not for three; his Lordship said that the Statute of Frauds put it out of the power of the Court to execute the contract for the lease for three lives, the part performance being perfectly consistent with the contract alleged by the defendant, and that therefore there was no case to admit proof of a further contract.²

They need only be referred to some contract and consistent with that alleged.

§ 582. The true principle, however, of the operation of acts of part performance seems only to require that the acts in question be such as must be referred to some contract, and may be referred to the alleged one; that they prove the existence of some contract, and are consistent with the contract alleged. This is very well illustrated by a case in the Common Pleas on the 17th section of the Statute of Frauds, by which acceptance is treated as such an act of part performance as dispenses with the necessity of writing.³ It was there held, that bare acceptance of the goods by the vendee was sufficient to satisfy that section of the statute, so that, although the vendee, immediately after accepting them, stated that he did so on terms different from those on which the vendor delivered them, yet the acceptance having established the fact of a contract of sale, parol evidence of its terms was admissible. It was there strongly urged that the acceptance must be equivalent to a memorandum in writing, and must show all the terms of the contract; but the doctrine was denied by the learned Judges, both during the argument and by their decision of the case. Williams J., in the course of his judgment, said, "The Legislature has thought that where there is a fact so consistent with the existence of a contract of sale as the actual acceptance of part of the goods sold, the necessity of a written evidence of the contract might safely be dispensed with. But it is clear that it was not meant to go to all the terms of the contract: and that acceptance is no evidence of the price, but only establishes the broad fact of the relation of vendor and vendee. So where there is proof of part performance, the jury must settle all the other facts that go to make up the contract."¹

§ 583. In like manner, Mr. Austin, in one of his Fragments, has called attention to the "distinction between such solemnities of a contract as are merely evidence of a contract and such as are evidence of a contract and of its terms." "Earnest, for instance," he adds, "is merely evidence that a contract was made: its subjects, its terms, &c., must be established by evidence aliunde."²

§ 584. To make the acts of part performance effective to take the contract out of the Statute of Frauds, they must be consistent with the contract alleged and also such as cannot be referred to any other title than a contract, nor have been done with any other view or design than to perform a contract:¹ therefore, if a tenant in possession sue for the specific performance of an alleged contract for a new lease, the mere fact of his continuance in possession will have no weight as an act of part performance of the contract, being referable to his character as tenant.² Where a tenant under a term alleged the rebuilding of a party-wall, which was in a ruinous state during his term, as part performance of a contract by his landlord to grant a renewed term: it was held that the act was equivocal, as it might have been done by him in respect of his title under the old as well as under the alleged new term.³ The cases in which possession is an act of part performance will be considered presently.⁴

ii. The acts must render non-performance a fraud.

§ 585. Secondly, the principle upon which the Court exercises jurisdiction in adjudging specific performance of parol contracts followed by part performance, is the fraud and injustice which would result from allowing the party charged to refuse to perform his part, after performance by the other upon the faith of the contract and with the knowledge of the party charged:⁵ and this principle extends not only to contracts which, but for such part performance, would be void by reason of the Statute of Frauds, but also to such as, being entered into by corporations, are invalid for want of their corporate seal.⁶

The principle stated by Lord Cottenham.

§ 586. "Courts of Equity," said Lord Cottenham,⁷ "exercise their jurisdiction, in decreeing specific performance of verbal agreements, where there has been part performance, for the purpose of preventing the great injustice which would arise from permitting a party to escape from the engagements he has entered into, upon the ground of the Statute of Frauds, after the other party to the contract has, upon the faith of such engagement, expended his money or otherwise acted in execution of the agreement. Under such circumstances, the Court will struggle to prevent such injustice from being effected; and, with that object, it has, at the hearing, when the plaintiff has failed to establish the precise terms of the agreement, endeavoured to collect, if it can, what the terms of it really were."

§ 587. Such being the principle on which the Court acts, it follows that, wherever the acts of the party to be charged have caused no change of circumstances in the other party,¹ and wherever the acts of part performance by the one are not such as to render refusal by the other party to perform the contract a fraud in him, however clearly they may evidence the existence of a contract, there the jurisdiction in question can have no application; and this may be the case either from the character of the person permitting the acts, or from the nature of the acts themselves.

No relief where refusal to perform is no fraud.

§ 588. From what has been said, it appears that the acts of part performance must in all cases be done by the person asserting the contract with the knowledge of the person sought to be charged that the acts are being done and are being done on the faith of the contract; without such knowledge there would be neither injustice nor fraud.

The acts must be done with the knowledge of the person to be charged.

§ 589. On the ground that the character of the person permitting the acts prevented the notion of fraud, it has been decided that where a plaintiff seeks to enforce against a remainderman a parol contract

Where not fraudulent from character of the person.

entered into between the plaintiff and the tenant for life, acts of part performance which would have bound the tenant for life will not bind the remainderman, unless it can be shown that he permitted the acts of the plaintiff with a knowledge of the contract entered into by the tenant for life.¹ For to constitute fraud, there must coincide in one and the same person knowledge of some fact and conduct inequitable having regard to such knowledge. And again, on the same principle, where the acts are those of persons not parties to the contract, they will not be binding: so that, for instance, acts done by arbitrators towards the performance of their duty, are not part performance of a parol contract for a compromise and division of estates by arbitrators.²

From the nature of the act.

§ 590. From the nature of the act, it follows, that though, as we shall hereafter see, it has been a question how far the acceptance of part of the purchase-money binds the vendor, the payment of this on the part of the purchaser can in nowise bind him, because to refuse to complete the contract after paying "part of the purchase-money, would be no fraud upon the seller, but his own loss."³ The question was raised in a case where the co-heirs of a purchaser sought the enforcement of the contract against his personal representatives, and set up his part payment as a part performance making it a binding contract:⁴ but, on the ground above stated, Grant M.R. decreed against the claim of the heirs.

remedies.

§ 591. Upon the same principle it seems doubtful whether any acts which admit of alternative remedies, one by the execution of the contract and another by some other means, as, for instance, a compulsory taking under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, can be taken as part performance; because there is no fraud on the other party if the remedy other than that by execution of the contract be pursued.¹

PART III.
Ch. xi.

§ 592. Thirdly, the contract which the acts of part performance allow to be set up by parol evidence must be of such a nature as that the Court would have had jurisdiction to enforce it specifically if it had been in writing. In this respect the jurisdiction of the High Court is the same as that of the Court of Chancery. The rule in the latter Court was that where there was jurisdiction in the original subject-matter, viz., the contract, the want of writing would not deprive the Court of it, where there was part performance. But the want of writing could not itself be made the ground of jurisdiction, for if that were so, all parol contracts required by the Statute of Frauds to be in writing, and in part performed, might have been enforced in Equity: which was not the case. Accordingly a demurrer to a bill for work and labour done, alleging fraud and part performance, was allowed by Lord Cottenham.²

iii. The contract must be such as can be enforced.

§ 593. As was to be expected, the fusion of Law and Equity has given rise to questions as to the extent of the doctrine of part performance. Is this equitable doctrine to be applied to all cases, or only to contracts where it would have been applied by the Court of Chancery? This question may be safely answered by saying that its application is to be thus restrained. But what is then its extent?

To what contracts does doctrine of part performance apply?

² Kirk v. Bromley Union, 2 Ph. 640. The case of Pembroke v. Thorpe (3 Sw. 437 n.) may appear at variance with this view, but will be reconciled by considering that Lord Hardwicke held the Court to have an original jurisdiction in respect of building contracts. See supra, § 98.

PART III.
Ch. xi.

In Britain v. Rossiter,¹ the limits of the doctrine were stated differently by each of the three learned judges: the M.R. (Lord Esher) confined it to "cases concerning land," Cotton L.J. to "questions relating to land," and Thesiger L.J. to "sales of land."

In Maddison v. Alderson,² Lord Selborne in his speech in the House of Lords referred to the decision in Britain v. Rossiter, and seems to have doubted how far it was consistent with the views of Lord Cottenham in *Hammersley v. De Biel*³ and Lassence v. Tierney.⁴

And in McManus v. Cooke,⁵ Kay J. criticised the case of Britain v. Rossiter, and discussed several relevant authorities, and concluded that probably it would be more accurate to say that the doctrine of part performance of a parol agreement "applies to all cases in which a Court of Equity would entertain a suit for specific performance if the alleged contract had been in writing."

It may be questioned whether this statement of the extent of the doctrine would not be made more accurate by omitting the words "for specific performance."

It does not apply to damages.

§ 594. It has been further held that the doctrine of part performance does not extend to enable the Court to award damages on a parol contract.⁶

Where want of a seal.

§ 595. The necessity of original jurisdiction in case the contract had been in writing in order to induce the Court to interfere in cases of parol contracts is illustrated by cases in which there has been a want not of writing, but of a seal. Thus where the plaintiff stated a claim against a company for work and labour done on the estate of the company, and alleged that, as the contract was not under seal, and as the company claimed the legal estate in the land, he had no remedy except in Chancery, a demurrer by the company to the plaintiff's bill was allowed.¹

PART III.
Ch. xi.

§ 596. So, again, where the engagement is of an honorary and not of a legal character, part performance gives the Court no jurisdiction.² Thus in the case of Lord Walpole v. Lord Orford,³ where two testators on the same day, and in the presence of the same witnesses, executed mutual wills; one of the testators having died, it was argued that there was part performance under circumstances which could only be referred to a contract between the testators to make such wills: but Lord Rosslyn, though inferring an agreement of some sort, held it to have been a merely honourable engagement, and one which the Court therefore could not carry into effect.

Where

gagement

character.

§ 597. On the same principle, there can be no part performance of an incomplete contract. For acts to amount to part performance, the contract "must be obligatory, and what is done must be done under the terms of the agreement and by force of the agreement."⁴

Or incomplete.

§ 598. Where, however, the owner of a ship-building yard proposed to construct a siding from it to a railway station close at hand, and obtained from the railway company a general assent to his proposal, and proceeded to make the siding, without the details of the arrangement having been agreed upon, and after the construction of the siding was allowed to use it on terms embodied in an informal memorandum; it was held that even had there not been any actual user the Court would probably have found means to enforce the completion of some arrangement by which the company would have been compelled to allow the siding to be used on reasonable terms, and that, the memorandum showing what were reasonable terms, an arrangement on that footing would be enforced.¹

possession adverse.

§ 599. It is perhaps scarcely needful to observe that where the possession taken is not under a contract, but adverse, the circumstance that there is no Common Law remedy does not suffice to give the Court jurisdiction.²

Particular
acts.

§ 600. The general character of the acts which are requisite to constitute part performance for the purpose in question having been stated, it is proposed now to show the result of these principles in respect of some particular acts.³

Possession.

§ 601. Possession is in some cases equivocal in respect of the title to which it is to be referred:⁴ in other cases it is not: therefore the possession of a tenant, after the expiration of a lease, which was referable only to a contract for a renewal, has been considered part performance of such a contract.⁵

Possession

ledged.

§ 602. Still more clearly "the acknowledged possession of a stranger in the land of another is not explicable except on the supposition of an agreement, and has therefore constantly been received as evidence of an antecedent contract."⁶ Thus, to refer to an

§ 603. Even where the possession has been taken without consent, yet if the owner afterwards allow the stranger to remain in possession, this will, it seems, operate as an act of part performance.²

in.

§ 604. Possession is, it must be observed, part performance both by and against the stranger and the owner:³ the owner has allowed the stranger to do an act on the faith of the contract, viz., enter on the land: the stranger has allowed the owner to do an act on the faith of the contract, viz., withdraw from the land. lease that possession is part performance. It may let in parol evidence of any contract explaining the possession. Thus where A. was in possession of his own land subject to a mortgage, and he, as he alleged, contracted with B. that B. should purchase the land from the mortgagee, and hold it for the benefit of A., subject to certain terms for the repayment of the purchase-money; and B. afterwards set up the purchase as being an absolute one for his own benefit; the continued possession of A. as owner of the land was held to be part performance of the contract alleged by him.¹ In another case A. by parol agreed to allow B. the occupation of a leasehold house for life, on payment merely of ground rent, rates, and taxes. B. was put into possession: and that possession was held to preclude any objection on the ground of the statute.²

contracts.

§ 607. Many cases have also arisen in respect of marriage contracts, where the part performance has excluded the operation of the statute. Thus in a case, where there was a parol promise before marriage to give certain property to the married pair by the father of the intended wife: the marriage took place, and was followed by the delivery up of possession to the son-in-law, expenditure of money by him, and the absence of all disturbance on the part of the father-in-law: these acts were held to be in part performance of the alleged ante-nuptial contract.³ And so where a father verbally promised, in consideration of his daughter's marriage, to give her a house as a wedding-present, and immediately after the marriage put the daughter and her husband into possession, and continued himself to pay what became due to a building society in respect of an existing mortgage on the house, it was held by the Court of Appeal (affirming the decision of Malins V.C.) that the possession took the case out of the statute, and that the balance due to the building society on the father's death was payable out of his estate.¹

§ 608. The same principle applies in cases of family arrangements involving the giving up, partition, or exchange of land; so that though such arrangements may be by parol, yet if they be followed by uninterrupted exclusive enjoyment of the several lands in pursuance of the arrangement, the Court will specifically enforce them.²

Family arrangements.

§ 609. In considering this effect of possession where the acquiescence has been of very long duration, the Court will regard the lapse of time as a circumstance against allowing the statute to be set up.³

Effect of lapse of time.

§ 610. The laying out of money, provided it be such as would only be likely to take place in pursuance of such a contract as that alleged, and it be with the privity of the other party, is an act of part performance.⁴ Therefore, where a proposed lessee entered and built, the acts were held to be such;⁵ and again, the alteration of a garden fence and the plantation of a meadow with the privity of the other party, and partly at his expense, by a tenant in possession, were held acts of part performance, evidencing a contract to demise the meadow for a term.⁶ So the expenditure of money, in alterations and repairs of the property, by a sub-lessee with the knowledge of the owner has been held to be part performance of the contract by the owner to let to the sub-lessor.¹

Ch. xi.

How different from possession.

§ 611. The expenditure of money differs, it will be observed, from possession, in two respects: the one, that whilst mere possession is referable to a tenancy at will, as well as to a larger estate, the laying out of any considerable sums of money is rationally to be referred only to some contract to confer a substantial interest in the property; the other, that whilst possession cannot be supposed to be continued by a stranger without the knowledge of the owner, a person in possession may well lay out money without the owner's cognizance: and what is therefore necessarily inferred in the one case must be proved in the other.

Expenditure and other acts admitting of compensation.

§ 612. There are cases where it has been held that, as money spent in repairs easily admits of compensation, such expenditure is no part performance, and consequently does not avail to take a case out of the statute;² and where the acts relied on are proper to be brought before a jury, and can be answered in damages, or are in the nature of acts of preparation,³ they will not be considered as part performance. But nothing can be clearer than that there are many acts, easily enough admitting of compensation, which yet amount to such part performance as will enable the Court to enforce a parol contract.

Payment of purchase-money.

§ 613. If the laying out of money in alterations in pursuance of a contract is a part performance of it,

De G. M. & G. 571; Furrall v. Davenport, 3 Giff. 363; Norris v. Jackson, ib. 396. Distinguish Millard v. Harvey, 34 Beav. 237.

it might be supposed that making a payment of the purchase-money payable under the contract was yet more clearly a part performance. But this cannot be said to be the case. For it seems now to be decided that the payment by the purchaser to the vendor of the whole¹ or a part, whether substantial or unsubstantial, of the purchase-money, is not an act of part performance which will take the parol contract out of the statute.

PART III.
Ch. xi.

§ 614. The best explanation of this doctrine is said by Lord Selborne² to be that the payment of money is an equivocal act, and not in itself, until the connection is established by parol testimony, indicative of a contract concerning land. But other grounds for this decision have been alleged, as that the mention of part payment in the 17th section of the Statute of Frauds, and the silence in that respect of the 4th section, must be taken to show that the Legislature did not intend that part payment should be binding in cases of the sale of lands:³ and again, that the money may be repaid, and that both parties will then be in the situation in which they were before the contract, without either party's having gained any inequitable advantage over the other.⁴ This is a case where, for the act done, there are alternative remedies, one by the execution of the contract, and the other by repayment,—and the election to put the other party to the latter remedy is no fraud. It has been truly said that this reasoning overlooks the possibility of an insolvency intervening and preventing the repayment of the purchase-money.⁵ What-law on this subject.

§ 615. The law upon this subject was, however, for a time somewhat vacillating. Lord Cowper held part payment not to be part performance.¹ Subsequently, in a case before Lord Hardwicke, he, on the contrary, held part payment to be part performance;² but this as a general proposition was early overruled. The question then arose whether, although payment of a small instalment was inoperative, payment of the whole or of a substantial part of the price would not be an act of part performance. Lord Rosslyn maintained the affirmative of this question;³ but Lord Redesdale denied any such distinction;⁴ and Lord Rosslyn's decision seems now to be overruled, upon the ground that it is impossible satisfactorily to discriminate between substantial and unsubstantial part payments.⁵

Payment of auction duty.

§ 616. Payment of the auction duty has been held not to be part performance, it being by the revenue laws essential to the contract, and "that without which there would have been no contract cannot be said to be in part performance of the contract."⁶

Payment of addi-
rent.

§ 617. The same vacillation which characterized the course of the authorities on payment of the purchase-money as part performance, has attended the cases dealing with the question whether payment of an additional rent is to be treated as part performance.

In the earliest case on the subject, it was laid down that such a payment, if shown or admitted to be on the foot of the contract, is a circumstance of part performance.¹ It was subsequently determined not to be,² but this decision appears to be overruled by the case of Nunn v. Fabian,³ where a landlord, having verbally agreed with his tenant to grant him a lease for twenty-one years at an increased rent, died before the execution of the lease, but after having received from the tenant one quarter's rent at the increased rate: and it was held that this payment constituted a sufficient act of part performance to take the case out of the statute.

Ch. xi.

*Nunn v.

§ 618. It is not easy to think that the whole group of cases dealing with the payment or expenditure of money on the footing of a contract is satisfactory. It would seem reasonable to hold one or other of two things: that all payments of money made by one contracting party with the knowledge of the other, and on the faith of the contract, should be deemed acts of part performance for the purpose in question: or that none of such acts should be deemed to be part performance, and that the Court should in all these cases think that the possibility of repayment deprived them of any effect on the Statute of Frauds. It does not seem reasonable to halt between the two opinions.

be binding must be in writing.¹ Accordingly, where there was, before marriage, a contract by parol for the settlement of part of the wife's property, and that the husband should take the rest, which he did, but there was no settlement made; and the wife subsequently filed her bill, stating these facts, for the purpose of obtaining a declaration of her rights in certain property coming to her, and the husband by his answer admitted the statements in the bill, and a deed was then prepared purporting to be a settlement on the wife in pursuance of the contract, and was signed but not acknowledged by the wife: in a suit by a plaintiff claiming under the settlement against the heir, it was held that there was no part performance by marriage, nor any other part performance of the parol contract, and that it was void and all the subsequent proceedings ineffectual.²

§ 620. In a case already referred to, the intended husband and wife, previously to marriage, agreed by a writing, which was held to be unsigned, that the husband should have the wife's property for her life, paying her a certain sum by way of pin-money, and that she should have it back again after his death; and instructions were given for a marriage settlement to have that effect; but no settlement was ever executed, the husband promising, as the wife alleged, to make a will giving her all his property—a promise which, if made, he did not keep. After the husband's death the wife sought specific performance of the ante-nuptial arrangement, but it was held that there was no contract in writing within the statute, and that the marriage was no part performance.¹ This decision was affirmed by the House of Lords,² but the question of part performance was not there argued.

PART III.
Ch. xi.

§ 621. There may, of course, often be acts connected with the marriage which, as independently of it they would be acts of part performance, are not the less so from being done in connection with it, and therefore differ from cases where the marriage is the sole act relied on. Thus, in a case which was ultimately decided by the House of Lords, it was held that the execution by the husband of a settlement in pursuance of a parol contract entered into by him with the lady's father previously to the marriage, being something over and above the marriage, was an act of part performance of the parol contract entered into previously to it.³ In the case of *Warden v. Jones*⁴ it was held by Lord Romilly M.R. that the execution of a settlement is no act of part performance where the previous parol contract is between the intended husband and wife only, and not between the husband and some third person, and that such a settlement must be considered a voluntary deed; and this decision was affirmed by Lord Cranworth.

Acts connected with marriage.

§ 622. The cases in which the Court relieves on the ground of marriage in fraud of a parol contract entered into previously must, of course, be distinguished from cases in which the marriage itself is set up as part performance of the contract.⁵

Marriage in fraud of previous parol contract.

§ 623. But though marriage be not, cohabitation may be a sufficient act of part performance. In a separation deed, the husband covenanted with a trustee for the payment of an annuity to his wife: shortly before the death of the husband, his wife returned to him upon the faith of a promise made by the husband to the wife and her trustee, that if she would do so he would continue to pay the annuity and would charge it upon his real estate. He died without having done so, and it was held that the contract could be enforced against the devisees of the husband, on the ground of part performance.¹

acts.

§ 624. As acts done prior to a contract cannot be referred to it as done in pursuance of it, they can never be treated as acts of part performance.²

Preparatory acts.

§ 625. And so also acts subsequent to the contract, and even in pursuance of it, if not strictly in performance of the contract as between the parties to it, but preparatory to such performance, cannot be taken as part performance. It is evident that acts of this sort may be, and for the most part are, the mere acts of the party doing them: the other party is not necessarily cognizant of them, and consequently he is not so bound by them as to render it fraudulent in him subsequently to refuse to carry the contract into the other party to the contract. So, again, where it was a condition of the contract that the plaintiff should obtain a release of a right from a third party, which the plaintiff did obtain by payment of a valuable consideration; it was held to be merely a preparatory act on the part of the plaintiff, and not a part performance of the contract.¹ And the appropriation of money by a party, though it may be with a view to an intended purchase, is not of itself any part performance or evidence of any contract.²

Whaley v. Bagnel.

§ 626. To the same principle may probably be referred the case of Whaley v. Bagnel,³ in the House of Lords. A. agreed by parol with B. for the purchase of lands: B. delivered a rent-roll to A., which showed by its heading that a contract had been entered into between them for the sale of the lands comprised in it at twenty-one years' purchase, and an abstract of the title and deeds was also delivered to A. for the purpose of effecting the sale: B. informed his creditors by letter that he had agreed to sell the land to A.: he took A. over the estate, introduced him as landlord to the tenants, and refused to renew leases and do other acts of management as owner, in these cases referring the tenants to A. B. also set up the contract against an elegit, and on the strength of it obtained a verdict finding him not to be seised of the lands in question: but notwithstanding all these circumstances, a plea of the Statute of Frauds was allowed.

plaintiffs (the would-be lessees) had executed the counterpart, the married woman (who had made no written request to the trustee) signified her intention to retire from the transaction. It was held by Lord Romilly M.R. that her execution of the lease was no part performance, and that there was no binding contract.

Parker v.
Smith.

§ 628. But where the contract between A. and B. comprises acts between A. and B., and also between B. and C., and A. may be supposed to have an interest or to have stipulated in respect of the acts between B. and C., part performance with knowledge of this part of the contract renders it binding on A. This seems to be illustrated by the case of Parker v. Smith.¹ There a lessor entered into a parol contract with a colliery company, holding a lease from him, and consisting of four partners, of whom two were his sons, that one of his sons and one of the other partners should retire and leave the benefit of the business to the remaining two, and that thereupon he would consider the subject of rent, which it was found was put too high in the original lease, and refer the subject to a competent person, and on the report of that person being made, would, if the report should seem right, adopt it, and grant a new lease. The dissolution of partnership so agreed on took place, and the two continuing partners released the others: these acts, being referable only to the contract, were held to take the case out of the Statute of Frauds, and specific performance of the contract to grant the lease was enforced against the lessor's assignees in bankruptcy. This case has, it must be added, been doubted by Lord Selborne.²

Surrender of lease.

§ 629. In a recent Irish case, B. being tenant to A. surrendered his lease on the faith of a parol contract by A. to grant a new lease to C.: the surrender was held an act of part performance, and the contract was enforced against A.'s representatives.¹

PART III.
Ch. xi.

§ 630. Fourthly, the effect of part performance being, as we have seen, to show that there is a contract, and to let in parol evidence of the terms of that contract, it becomes necessary to inquire on what evidence or admission of the contract the Court will act.

iv. Of the evidence of the contract.

§ 631. The cases which require to be considered may be classified as follows :

Classification of the cases.

(1.) Where the defendant admits the contract as alleged.

(2.) Where the defendant denies the contract as alleged, and the plaintiff supports his case by one witness only.

(3.) Where the defendant denies the contract as alleged, and the evidence proves a contract, but different to that alleged by the plaintiff.

(4.) Where the defendant denies the contract as alleged, but admits another contract.

§ 632. (1.) An admission of the contract in the pleadings of course precludes the necessity of further proof: and the fact that the defence claims the benefit of the Statute of Frauds is immaterial in case of part performance, for that excludes the operation of the statute.²

1. Contract admitted in pleadings.

§ 633. (2.) Under the practice of the Court of Chancery, where the contract was positively denied by the answer and was proved only by the unsupported evidence of one witness, that was not allowed to prevail: but where the one witness was corroborated in his statements by circumstances, the proof might prevail over the denial.³ But now that the defence is not put in upon oath, the Court would no doubt feel itself justified, in a proper case, in acting upon the evidence of a single witness against the unsworn denial of the defendant. But if the defendant, in answer to interrogatories or by his evidence, swore positively to the denial, the Court would probably refuse to act upon the affirmative evidence of a single witness, if uncorroborated.

3. Variation between the contracts alleged and proved.

§ 634. (3.) In considering the cases in which a variation has arisen between the contract alleged and that proved, it must be borne in mind that the burthen of proving his case rests, of course, on the plaintiff, and therefore, if there be any such conflict of evidence as leaves any uncertainty in the mind of the Court as to what the terms of the parol contract were, its interference will be refused.¹

Instances.

§ 635. Therefore, where there were variations between the evidence of the one witness and a memorandum of the contract in a pocket-book which was produced, the witness mentioning 1000 guineas exclusive of timber as the price, whilst the pocket-book made no mention of the timber, the Court dismissed the bill.² And where a contract was alleged by the bill, another proved by the plaintiff's one witness, and a third admitted by the two defendants, specific performance was decreed according to the contract set up by the answers; but Lord Rosslyn considered that in strictness the bill ought to have been dismissed.³ In a more recent case, where one contract was alleged and another proved, the bill was dismissed without prejudice to the filing of another bill.⁴ The inclination of Lord Cottenham's mind seems to have been to struggle with apparently conflicting evidence, rather than to dismiss the bill, where there had been part performance.¹ In one case Turner L.J. observed that PART III.

Ch. xi. “there are cases in which the Court will go to a great extent in order to do justice between the parties when possession has been taken, and there is an uncertainty about the terms of the contract.”² And in the case of Oxford v. Provand,³ where there had been part performance of a contract alleged to be vague in its terms, Sir William Erle in delivering the judgment of the Privy Council said, “With respect to the supposed vagueness of the memorandum of agreement, their Lordships propose to consider what is the true construction of that memorandum, having regard to the terms of the instrument and to the surrounding circumstances, and also in reference to this suit for specific performance, and to the conduct of the parties in the interval between the making of the agreements and the commencement of the suit.”⁴

§ 636. Where the variation between the contract alleged and that proved consists in the plaintiff's admission of some term against himself, or omission of some term in his favour;⁵ or where the term which constitutes the variation is immaterial, from its being merely the expression of what would be implied or from its having been actually performed, the Court will not refuse the evidence of the contract. So that where a tenant alleged that he was to pay taxes and do necessary repairs, and the contract proved did not contain this term:⁶ and again, where a plaintiff admitted a contract to drain the lands generally, and he only proved one to drain where necessary, and he also stated as part of the contract that he was to lay certain arable land into pasture, which was not proved by the evidence:¹ in each of these cases, the variation was considered as no reason for rejecting the evidence of the contract.²

Inquiry. § 637. It is perhaps not quite clearly decided whether the Court can, in any case, direct an inquiry into the terms of a contract, when it has not been sufficiently proved to enable the Court to pronounce a final judgment upon the evidence before it. Lord Manners³ strongly expressed an opinion that the Court has no such jurisdiction, a view which seems to have met with the approval of the highest authorities.⁴ And in the case of Crook v. Corporation of Seaford,⁵ where Stuart V.C. had made an order giving the parties liberty to apply in Chambers in reference to the performance of the contract, Lord Hatherley said, that he felt some difficulty about the decree, for it was the duty of the Court to ascertain whether there was a contract, and if not to dismiss the bill; but being himself of opinion that a contract had been made out, his Lordship varied the order by striking out the reference to Chambers, and declaring what the contract between the parties was, and ordering specific performance of it.

The
present
practice.

§ 638. The authorities upon the point now under discussion to which reference has been made, were all under the old practice, and were greatly influenced by the incapacity of the Court of Chancery, except under very unusual circumstances, to permit an amendment of the record at the hearing. The High Court will probably feel itself freed from some of the difficulties which arose in dealing with cases when one contract was alleged and another proved: it will probably, for the most part, feel it possible to deal with the matter once for all, and not to postpone the real discussion till a further proceeding shall have been taken: it is probable that the main question will always appear to be, Was there really and in truth a contract or not? that if there were, the Court will generally allow the needful amendment to put that contract in issue: that if there were not, it will generally give judgment for the defendant, without reserving any right to the plaintiff to institute fresh proceedings. But the circumstances will govern the discretion of the Court in each case which may arise.

§ 639. (4.) It remains to consider the cases in which the contract alleged by the plaintiff has been denied, but another has been admitted by the defendant. In such cases, if the acts of part performance were consistent alike with the one contract and the other, Lord Redesdale seems to have considered that there was no case to admit proof of the contract alleged by the bill, and that the acts of part performance must be such as to show them to have been done in pursuance of the very same contract as that alleged.¹ It is however submitted, that this view of the case is inconsistent with the general doctrine of the operation of the acts of part performance: that they open the whole question of the terms of the contract to parol evidence: and that as a written contract where there are acts of part performance may be added to by parol,² so a contract set up by the defence may be modified by parol. If this were not so, the plaintiff would be at the mercy of the defendant: for whereas if he simply denied the contract, the plaintiff would have an opportunity of proof by parol; when he set

§ 640. It may be added that the existence of a signed but incomplete contract is no obstacle in the way of proving the additional terms by parol where there is part performance:² for the whole might have been proved by parol, and so may part. The doctrine of parol variation has, of course, no application, where by reason of acts of part performance parol evidence is admissible.

Companies

Act, 1845,
s. 97. § 645. The Companies Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 16), sect. 97,¹ is as follows:—

“The power which may be granted to any such committee [of directors] to make contracts, as well as the power of the directors to make contracts on behalf of the company, may lawfully be exercised as follows, (that is to say,)

With respect to any contract which, if made between private persons, would be by law required to be in writing, and under seal, such committee or the directors may make such contract on behalf of the company in writing, and under the common seal of the company, and in the same manner may vary or discharge the same:

With respect to any contract which, if made between private persons, would be by law required to be in writing, and signed by the parties to be charged therewith, then such committee or the directors may make such contract on behalf of the company in writing, signed by such committee or any two of them, or any two of the directors, and in the same manner may vary or discharge the same:

With respect to any contract which, if made between private persons, would by law be valid although made by parol only, and not reduced to writing, such committee or the directors may make such contract on behalf of the company by parol only without writing, and in the same manner may vary or discharge the same:

provisions.

§ 647. Somewhat similar provisions with regard to the contracts of companies were contained in the Joint Stock Companies Registration Act, 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, ss. 44—46; the Joint Stock Banks Registration Act, 7 & 8 Vict. c. 113, s. 22 (as to bills of exchange and promissory notes only); and the Joint Stock Companies Act, 1856, s. 41. But these Acts are now repealed.

iii. From the doctrine of part performance.

§ 648. (iii.) Another exception arises from the doctrine of part performance: for it appears to be clear that such part performance as will prevent an ordinary defendant from setting up the defence of the Statute of Frauds, will prevent a defendant company from setting up either that defence or a defence grounded on the absence of the corporate seal, or of the statutory formalities, in accordance with which the company may be enabled to contract. This was clearly laid down in the case of Wilson v. West Hartlepool Harbour and Railway Co.,¹ and there are other authorities leading to the same conclusion.²

It must however be added that part performance by a company of a contract not under seal, which is not in its nature the subject of specific performance, as,

CHAPTER XIII.

OF MISREPRESENTATION.

PART III.
Ch. xiii.

Effect of a misre-presentation.

§ 650. A MISREPRESENTATION, whether fraudulent or innocent, having relation to the contract, made by one of the parties to the other of them, is a ground for refusing the interference of the Court in specific performance at the instance of the former party; and may in certain cases be a ground for its active interference in setting aside the contract at the instance of the latter.¹ Representations are most usually by word, written or spoken, but they may be by act, as, for instance, by the performance of fraudulent experiments, on the faith of which a contract was entered into for a license under a patent.²

Elements of a mis-representation.

§ 651. Such misrepresentations may be resolved into some or all of the following elements, namely,—first, a statement actually untrue: secondly, the making of that statement by a party to the contract: thirdly, the condition of mind of the person making the statement as to its truth or untruth: fourthly, the intent in the party making the statement to induce the other party to enter into the contract: fifthly, the reliance on the statement by the party to whom it is made: sixthly, the statement having such a relation to the contract as that the statement being false makes the contract unconscionable.

¹ Edwards v. M'Leay, Coop. 308; S. C. 2 Sw. 287; Gibson v. D'Este, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 542, reversed in D. P. sub. nom., Wilde v. Gibson, 1

H. L. C. 605; St. Leon. Law of Prop. 614.

² Lovell v. Hicks, 2 Y. & C. Ex. 46.

§ 652. It will be desirable to discuss these points separately; and, in doing so, it must be remembered that it makes a material difference whether the misrepresentation in question is alleged by way of defence to an action for specific performance, or to a Common Law action on the contract, or as the ground for an action of deceit, or for the rescission of the contract; for somewhat less than the ingredients requisite for either of the two latter proceedings¹ will suffice to prevent the active interference of the Court in specific performance. The object of the present chapter being to consider misrepresentations in relation to specific performance, it is, of course, only incidentally and very partially discussed in any other relation.

PART III.
Ch. xiii.

Division
and limitation of the subject.

§ 653. A misrepresentation may or may not be a fraud. Where it is false to the knowledge of the person making it, it is a fraud. Where its falsity was not known, it may have been carelessly made, or even in perfect innocence: and yet the fact that the statement was false may render it unconscionable in the person who made the statement to enforce the contract which it produced.

Misrepresentation
how related to fraud.

§ 654. (i.) The first point calls for little remark. It is obvious that, to constitute misrepresentation, there must be a statement, and that statement must be untrue.

i. A statement made and untrue.

§ 655. Mere silence is, generally speaking, neither misrepresentation nor fraud; and, as will be shown in the next chapter, it is quite open to a vendor or purchaser to maintain such silence, though its effect may be that the other party acts under a misapprehension. But silence may amount to misrepresentation: as where, in the course of communications

PART III.
Ch. xiii.

about a title, the solicitor of one party so wrote that he assumed certain things; the assumption was erroneous to the knowledge of the solicitor of the other party, but he let the matter pass in silence: this was held to be a misrepresentation.¹

When a statement is to be held untrue.

§ 656. The statement must be untrue: and in determining this question, it will not suffice to show that the language used might admit of a meaning which would make it correct.² It must, it is conceived, be held to be untrue wherever it is found that the speaker intended or expected the hearer to accept it in a sense in which it would not be true.

ii. The making of it by a party or his agent.

§ 657. (ii.) The statement which is relied on as a misrepresentation must have been made by a party to the contract or his agent, and not by a stranger. "If," said Lord Romilly M.R. "a third person, by representing to A. that it will be highly for his benefit, and by false representations induces him to enter into a contract with B., but B. makes no false representation, and is neither party or privy to any such, then the contract is valid, and stands good in this Court. But the person who, by false representations, induced the other to enter into that contract is liable, in an action, to make good to the person he has misled the damage he has sustained by acting on the misrepresentation made to him."³ *Duranty's case*⁴ and *Ex parte Worth*⁵ bring this principle into clear relief: for in those cases it has been held that if directors, as agents of the company, issue a false report, and third persons, influenced by this report, contract with the company for shares, the contract may be avoided: but that if the same third persons contract with individual shareholders for shares, the contract cannot be avoided.

PART III.
Ch. xiii.

§ 658. It is, of course, enough that the agent was appointed to bring about the contract for the principal, and that he made the misrepresentation. It is not needful that he should have been appointed the agent to make the misrepresentation.¹ Thus, in the cases in which contracts have been rescinded against companies, the representations have been made by the directors, who, of course, have no express authority to make a misrepresentation.²

What agency must be proved.

§ 659. (iii.) As to the state of mind of the person making the statement as to its truth or falsehood; it is to be observed that though there can be no fraud without the knowledge of the untruth of the statement, yet there may well be misrepresentation, i. e., the representation may be erroneous, though not known to be so.

iii. The state of mind of the party making the statement.

§ 660. We are not here concerned with an action to rescind a contract or an action for deceit, or a defence to an action for damages on the ground of fraud or misrepresentation: we are concerned with actions for specific performance: in such, it is conceived to be clear that a false statement, though believed to be true, if made with a view to a contract by a party to the contract, is a good defence. In Wall v. Stubbs,³ Plumer V.C. observed, "that whether the misrepresentation be wilful or not, of a fact latent or patent, such misrepresentation may be used to resist a specific performance, unless the purchaser really knew how the fact was."

Lord Hatherley (when V.C.) in Higgins v. Samels,¹ in which case the defendant resisted specific performance on the ground of misrepresentation by the plaintiff, and it did not appear that the plaintiff knew the falsity of the statement which he made. His Lordship concluded that it was not necessary to prove that the representation complained of was made with a knowledge that it was false; and in so concluding relied on *Taylor v. Ashton*² and Evans v. Edmonds.³ The latter case arose on a covenant in a separation deed, to which fraud was pleaded, and Maule J. said, "I conceive that if a man, having no knowledge whatever on the subject, takes upon himself to represent a certain state of facts to exist, he does so at his peril: and, if it be done either with a view to secure some benefit to himself, or to deceive a third person, he is in law guilty of a fraud, for he takes upon himself to warrant his own belief of the truth of that which he so asserts."⁴ Indeed executed contracts have been rescinded on the ground of their having been induced by false statements which were believed to be true by the persons making them.⁵

by agent in Common Law actions.

§ 662. Questions of considerable nicety have been raised at Common Law as to the effect of the misrepresentation by an agent, where the principal is innocent and neither authorized nor knew of the misstatement. It has been discussed whether such misrepresentations render the principal liable in an action for deceit.⁶ It has in a celebrated case been held, that where an agent, without designing to deceive, made a representation which was false, but which he did not know to be so, whilst the principal had the knowledge of the actual facts, but did not make the representation, there was no evidence to support a plea of fraud or covin.¹

PART III.
Ch. xiii.

§ 663. But as an innocent misrepresentation by a party to the contract is a bar to his seeking specific performance of it, such questions do not seem to arise in actions of this nature: for it seems clear that any misrepresentation of an agent leading up to the contract, though both principal and agent were innocent, would debar the principal from specific performance.

Always fatal to specific performance.

§ 664. It may probably be laid down that there are many cases in Equity in which a man is bound who makes a representation which is not true, though without knowledge of its untruth, and this even though the mistake be innocent: for a man, before making a representation, ought not only not to know it to be untrue, he ought to know that it is true.² So in a case where a trustee was charged by the Court in respect of a misrepresentation made to a purchaser, and the trustee alleged that he did not at the time recollect the fact thus misrepresented, Grant M.R. said, "the plaintiff cannot dive into the secret recesses of his (the trustee's) heart, so as to know whether he did or did not recollect the fact, and it is no excuse to say that he did not recollect it."³ In like manner, it may be added that, in the cases of agents rendering themselves personally liable, it is the same whether they represent what they know to be false, or what they do not know to be true.¹ iv. The intent of the mis-representation.

§ 665. (iv.) The misrepresentation must have been made in relation to the contract in question, and with a view to induce the other party to enter into it; it must be capable of being described as dans locum contractui.² Hence, unless under very special circumstances, it must have been made at the time of the treaty,³ and not have relation to some collateral matter, or other relation or dealing between the parties.⁴

National Exchange
Co. v.
Drew.

§ 666. This point was much discussed in a Scotch case in the House of Lords. There, a tottering joint-stock company had put out flourishing annual reports of its condition, and shortly after the last of these reports, and with a view to prevent its shares falling in the market and to counteract certain unfavourable rumours, the company, through their manager, urged the defenders to purchase additional shares in the concern, and assured them that the company would advance the necessary funds, and that the stock should be held until it could be sold at a profit, without the defenders being called on to pay any money: the shares became valueless, and the company sued for the money advanced, to which the defenders pleaded the fraud of the company: to this plea it was, amongst other things, objected that the loan was one independent transaction, and the purchase another, lished prospectus can be presumed in the absence of specific evidence to have been the basis of an insurance effected with them, see Wheulton v. Hardisty, 8 El. & Bl. 232.

and that the alleged misrepresentation in the purchase did not vitiate the loan. But it was held by their Lordships that the defence was good, Lord Cranworth putting it on the ground that the transaction did not constitute a loan in the ordinary sense of the word, but a special contract by the company to purchase for the defenders, to be repaid only in a particular manner; and Lord St. Leonards holding that the purchase and the loan were one transaction, though consisting of two parts,—that if there had been no loan there would have been no purchase, and if there had been no purchase there would have been no loan.¹

PART III.
Ch. xiii.

§ 667. On the other hand, it has been held by the House of Lords that a purchaser of shares in the market, upon the faith of a prospectus which he has not received from its authors, cannot so connect himself with them as to render them liable for the misrepresentation contained in it.² In earlier cases it had been held, that a report published by the directors of a company as addressed to its shareholders, but intended to come and coming into the hands of any person who might wish to purchase shares, was a representation made by the directors to any person who might obtain the report and on the faith of it buy shares;³ and that false representations made by the directors of a company to the secretary of the Stock Exchange to obtain an official quotation justified a person who, knowing the rules of the Exchange, had bought on the faith of the quotation so obtained, in suing the directors in damages:⁴ but in *Peek v. propriety of the former of these two cases, expressed strong dissent from the latter.

It need hardly be said that if, in any case where an action for deceit would lie, the result of the misrepresentations had been a contract between a director and one of the public, and the director had sued the purchaser in specific performance, the purchaser would have had a clear defence.

Nicol's case.

§ 668. Where directors as agents of the company prepared false reports and a circular addressed to the shareholders and customers of the bank, and intended for them, and one of the directors took these papers to a person who was neither a shareholder nor a customer, and thereby induced him to become a shareholder, it was held that the company were not bound, on the two grounds, (1) that the authority was given to the directors as a body and not to each one individually, and (2) that the paper was prepared for one purpose and applied by an individual director for another.¹

v. The reliance on the statement.

§ 669. (v.) Another circumstance essential to misrepresentation as a defence to specific performance is, that it was in reliance upon the statements in question that the party to whom they were made entered into the contract. In Attwood v. Small,² which was a case for the rescission of the contract (and for this point the plaintiff's case for rescission and the defendant's case against specific performance seem alike), Lord Brougham, after referring to the earlier cases, said, "Now, my Lords, what inference do I draw from these cases? It is this, that general fraudulent conduct signifies nothing; that general dishonesty of purpose signifies nothing; that attempts to overreach go for nothing; that an intention and design to deceive may go for nothing, unless all this dishonesty of purpose, all this fraud, all this intention and design, can be connected with the particular transaction, and not only connected with the particular transaction, but must be made to be the very ground upon which this transaction took place, and must have given rise to this contract.”

PART III.
Ch. xiii.

§ 670. In Redgrave v. Hurd,¹ this question was much considered, and the case of Attwood v. Small was much discussed. In Redgrave v. Hurd, the misrepresentation was in respect of a solicitor's practice, and the judge who tried the case concluded that the defendant did not rely on the misrepresentations, but bought without regard to them. From this conclusion the Court of Appeal dissented, and in the course of his judgment, the late M.R., Sir George Jessel,² said, “If it (i. e., the representation made) is a material representation calculated to induce him (i. e., the party resisting performance) to enter into the contract, it is an inference of Law that he was induced by the representation to enter into it.” This is probably an erroneous statement; but the Law probably justifies this view that if the representation be of a kind likely to be influential on the mind, the Court will so hold it on very slight evidence, unless the contrary be satisfactorily shown by evidence or admission. But in every case the question whether or no reliance was placed upon the statement made is a question of fact, and not an inference of Law.³

Redgrave v. Hurd.

§ 671. It is not, of course, necessary that the statements which were false should have been the sole inducements to the contract. The presence of true

Ch. xiii.

statements will not remove or cancel the effect of false ones.¹

Vagueness of the representations.

§ 672. In considering whether the defendant relied on the misrepresentation of the plaintiff, the Court will discriminate between such representations as are in conscience a part of the bargain, whether incorporated into the legal contract or not, and mere vague commendations, as the holding out of mere hopes or expectations which ought to put the other party upon further inquiry; and in judging of this, it is important to consider whether the thing stated may lie in the knowledge of the party making the representation, or whether it must lie beyond his knowledge. Thus, for instance, with regard to mines, a distinction will be drawn between a specific account of what was to be seen in the mine, and a general description of its prospects and capabilities, which from the very nature of the property must be problematical and doubtful.² So, again, the misrepresentations relied on must be statements of alleged facts and not mere expressions of opinion.

Instances.

§ 673. Accordingly, where an advowson was sold by auction, and the particulars stated that a voidance of the preferment was likely to occur soon, but made no mention of the present incumbent, and the auctioneer at the sale stated in explanation that the living would be void on the death of a person aged eighty-two; and in fact the then incumbent was only thirty-two years of age: Grant M.R. held the representation made by the particulars so vague and indefinite that its only effect ought to have been to put the defendant upon making inquiries, and accordingly granted specific performance.¹ And so, again, the representation that land was uncommonly rich water-meadow, whereas, in fact, it was very imperfectly watered, was held not to be a bar to performance:² and the like was held as regards a statement to the effect that the land in course of time might be covered with warp and considerably improved at a moderate cost.³

§ 674. But, generally speaking, in statements made by the vendor as to property, he is bound to make them free from all ambiguity, and “the purchaser is not bound to take upon himself the peril of ascertaining the true meaning of the statement;”⁴ and in all cases of commendation by the vendor, a specific statement as to the character of the thing sold is to be distinguished from general laudation. The statement that a lime which would be produced by stone to be got in an unopened field would be of a particular quality, was held sufficiently precise to furnish a defence.⁵

tion by

§ 675. Besides the vagueness of the representation, there are other grounds upon which the Court will conclude that it was not relied upon by the party to whom it was made: these were discussed by Lord Langdale M.R. in the case of Clapham v. Shilito.⁶ His Lordship there said: “Cases have frequently occurred in which upon entering into contracts misrepresentations made by one party have not been, in any degree, relied on by the other party. entered into the contract, it may appear that he relied upon the result of his own investigation and inquiry, and not upon the representations made to him by the other party: or if the means of investigation and verification be at hand, and the attention of the party receiving the representations be drawn to them, the circumstances of the case may be such as to make it incumbent on a Court of justice to impute to him a knowledge of the result, which, upon due inquiry, he ought to have obtained, and thus the notion of reliance on the representations made to him may be excluded. Again, when we are endeavouring to ascertain what reliance was placed on representations, we must consider them with reference to the subject-matter and the relative knowledge of the parties. If the subject is capable of being accurately known, and one party is, or is supposed to be, possessed of accurate knowledge, and the other is entirely ignorant, and a contract is entered into after representations made by the party who knows, or is supposed to know, without any means of verification being resorted to by the other, it may well enough be presumed that the ignorant man relied on the statements made to him by him who was supposed to be better informed: but if the subject is in its nature uncertain,—if all that is known about it is matter of inference from something else, and if the parties making and receiving representations on the subject have equal knowledge and means of acquiring knowledge, and equal skill, it is not easy to presume that representations made by one would have much or any influence upon the other.”¹

Mere presence of means of knowledge.

§ 676. It must not from this be inferred that the mere presence of the means of detecting the misstatement prevents the deceived person from relying on it.²

If a statement be made by A. to B. and the means of verification be offered, B. may rely on the statement and refuse the investigation: but if he accept the investigation and find or might have found the statement false, he cannot afterwards allege that he relied on the statement: for in fact he did not.

§ 677. He who, because he does not rely on what is stated to him, resorts to other means of knowledge, cannot afterwards say that the misrepresentation was what he relied on. "If," said Lord Holt C.J., alluding to the circumstances of the case before him, "the vendor gives in his particular of the rents, and the vendee says he will trust him and inquire no further, but rely upon his particular; then, if the particular be false, an action will lie; but if the vendee will go and inquire further what the rents are, there it seems unreasonable he should have any action, though the particular be false, because he did not rely upon the particular."¹

§ 678. It was on this ground that the House of Lords ultimately decided the celebrated case of Attwood v. Small.² The British Iron Company had sent a deputation of their directors down to Mr. Attwood's works for the express purpose of verifying his representations, and they expressed their satisfaction with the proofs produced: by this line of conduct they precluded themselves from being able to rely on any previous misrepresentations: for if a purchaser chooses to judge for himself, and does not avail himself of all the knowledge and means of knowledge open to him, he will not afterwards be allowed to say that he was deceived by the representations of the vendor. This decision was given in a suit for rescission, and not upon a defence to a specific performance; but for the present point these seem to be alike.³ But the mere

§ 679. The principle is further illustrated by the case of Jennings v. Broughton,² where the plaintiff, having bought shares in a mine, afterwards sought to set aside the sale on the ground of misrepresentation as to the state of the mine; but he having visited the mine himself, and the alleged misstatements being such as he was competent to detect, the Court held that his purchase of shares had not been made in reliance on the representations, and the bill was dismissed both by Lord Romilly M.R. and the Court of Appeal in Chancery. "I desire," said Knight Bruce L.J., "to be understood as at once giving my opinion against the plaintiff with regard to every 'object of sense' which on either visit to the mine he may, as an educated man of ordinary intelligence, having the use of his eyes, his mind on the alert and his interest awakened, be reasonably taken (whether much or little of a workman or a philosopher) to have observed."³ With this last mentioned case may advantageously be brought into comparison the case of Higgins v. Samels,⁴ where the representation was as to the character of the lime which could be made from the stone under a field, and where after this statement the defendant and two friends made a cursory inspection of the field in company with the plaintiff, and it did not appear that any of the persons were competent to judge by inspection of the quality of the stone for the purpose of lime burning. § 680. Where a purchaser complained of a representation that the woods sold had yielded 250*l.* per annum on an average of fifteen years, on the ground that though they might in fact have done so, yet that they would not have done so in a fair course of husbandry, his objection was held to be displaced by proof that he had been put in possession of a paper from which he might have ascertained that the woods had been unequally cut.¹ Lowndes v. Lane.

§ 681. The allegation of misrepresentation may also be effectually met by proof that the party alleging it was from the beginning cognisant of all the matters complained of,² or after full information concerning them continued to act on the footing of the contract, or to deal with the property comprised in it as if held under the contract: as, for instance, where a lessee of a mine after knowledge of alleged misrepresentation, continued to work it.³ Other knowledge itself.

§ 682. Whether a misrepresentation not of fact, but of law, would afford a defence to an action for specific performance has not, it is believed, been decided.⁴ But for the purposes of holding a defendant liable to make good a representation, or of rescinding a contract, it is certain that it must be a statement not of law, but of fact.⁵ No one is at liberty to say that he does not know the law. which destroyed their title to a material part of the property sold (viz., the fact that it was a recent encroachment from a common), and nevertheless represented that they were the owners in fee simple or had free power to dispose of the inheritance of the whole of the property sold, and the abstract they delivered did not disclose the material fact, it was held by Grant M.R. and Lord Eldon that a bill for rescission could be maintained. § 685. The authority of Edwards v. M'Leay was followed and relied on by Knight Bruce V.C. in the celebrated case of Gibson v. D'Este,³ in which he decided that the knowledge in the vendor or her agent of a right of way over the property sold of which the purchaser was not aware, and which was not stated to him by the vendor or her agent, was a ground for the rescission of the contract. This decision was, however, overruled by the House of Lords, on the principle that, in order to set aside a purchase perfected by conveyance and payment of the purchase-money, there must be proof of the direct personal knowledge and concealment by the principal, and not merely by an agent, and that such proof was wanting in the case.⁴ This decision has by no means given universal satisfaction,⁵ but whether correct or not, it § 686. Where a misrepresentation has been made by the vendor with regard to some patent defect in the thing sold, and it is proved that the purchaser had seen the thing sold, so that this defect must have been known to him, he will not be able to avail himself of the defect as a bar to specific performance. This was decided by Grant M.R. in the case of Dyer v. Hargrave,¹ where a farm was described as all lying within a ring-fence, whereas it did not in fact so lie; but it was clearly proved that the defendant had lived in the neighbourhood all his life, had seen the farm before purchasing it, and must have known whether it did lie in a ring-fence or not; and on these facts the Master of the Rolls decided that the defendant was clearly excluded from insisting upon the misrepresentation as a defence. This principle will of course only apply where the thing in respect of which the representation is made is one perfectly visible to everybody.² Where defect is patent.

§ 687. This case was supported by Grant M.R. by the analogy of warranties at Common Law, in which, however general, defects apparent at the time of the bargain are not included, because they can form no subject of deceit or fraud; so that, for example, a person who buys a horse knowing it to be blind in both eyes, cannot sue for this defect on a general warranty of soundness.³ Analogy with warranties.

§ 688. But for the vendor thus to countervail the effects of his own misrepresentation, the evidence of knowledge in the other party must be conclusive: he “must show very clearly that the purchaser knew that to be untrue which was represented to him as The evidence of knowledge must be clear.

Such being the proof required, it is very certain that the mere circumstance of other means of knowledge being open to the purchaser will not have this effect, even though, independently of any statement, the party relying on the representation would in law have been taken to have had notice of the contrary. The doctrine of notice has no application where there has been a representation as to the fact of which notice would be implied:² the proof must go further, and clearly show the purchaser to have had communicated to his mind information of the real state of facts.³

§ 690. Therefore, where a distinct representation has been made, it will not be countervailed by any general statement or any circumstances from which an inference inconsistent with the representation might be drawn, even though in the absence of such representation they might be sufficient to put the other party on inquiry.⁴

§ 691. Nor will it prevent the effect of a misrepresentation that the party making it recommended the other to consult his friends and professional advisers, for “no man can complain that another has too implicitly relied on the truth of what he has himself stated.”⁵

§ 696. From the same principle it follows that if A. make a misrepresentation to the agent of B., which is believed by the agent to be true but known by B. to be false, B. cannot avail himself of this as a defence to specific performance.²

vi. The misrepresentation must be essential.

§ 697. (vi.) It is, for obvious reasons, necessary, to constitute a misrepresentation which will prevent a specific performance, that the statement in question shall be so material to the contract built on it that, if the statement be false, the contract becomes one which it would be unconscionable for the party having made the statement to enforce. In other words, the misrepresentation must be shown to have operated to the prejudice of the defendant.³ Therefore, where A. induced a purchaser to think that he was contracting with B. through his (A.'s) agency, whereas he was, in fact, contracting with A. himself, but there was nothing to induce the belief that he would not have contracted on the same terms with A., or that he had sustained any loss or inconvenience from acting under the mistake, the Court enforced performance of the contract.⁴ But it is sufficient if the misrepresentation operate to the prejudice of the defendant to a very small extent.⁵

CHAPTER XIV.

OF FRAUD.

PART III.
Ch. xiv.
Fraud.

§ 701. FRAUD of course includes not only misrepresentation when fraudulent, which has already been considered, but also all other unconscionable and deceptive dealing of either party to any contract.

Comes
before the Court in several relations.

§ 702. Fraud comes before the Court in several relations:—as a defence to an action for damages on the contract; as the ground for an action for deceit; as a ground for setting aside an executory or even an executed contract; as forming an exception to the Statute of Frauds (in which relation it has been considered in the chapter¹ on that statute); and lastly, as a defence to an action for specific performance. With the last only we are now directly concerned.

Fraud in obtaining
contract.

§ 703. Fraud may arise either in the obtaining of the contract, or in the course of its performance.

Fraud in the obtaining of the contract has long been held a ground for the cancellation of the contract; and à fortiori it presents to the party defrauded a complete defence to an action for specific performance.

Fraud in performing contract.

§ 704. Whether fraud in the course of its performance is in all cases a ground for the rescission of a contract is a point which cannot be considered as finally settled: it certainly appears to be so in all cases in which rescission is the only adequate remedy.² It is conceived that in no case could a party guilty of fraud in the performance of a contract ask the Court to interfere for the purpose of enforcing its further performance. Thus if A. were to contract with B. for the sale of an estate at such a price as C. should fix and then were to bribe C. to fix a very high price, A. could never, it is submitted, bring an action against B. for the performance of the contract either at a price to be fixed by C. or by any third person.

PART III.
Ch. xiv.

§ 705. In the chapter on Misrepresentation it has been seen, that the suggestion of what is false is a ground for refusing specific performance, and also in certain cases for rescinding contracts: the same results flow from the non-disclosure of a fact which is material, and which it is the duty of one party to the contract to disclose to the other,¹ or from the active suppression and concealment of a fact which is material, and which the other party would have come to know, but for such suppression and concealment.

Suppression of a fact.

But mere silence as regards a material fact which the one party is not under an obligation to disclose to the other cannot be a ground for rescission or a defence to specific performance.

Silence.

It becomes then most material to consider what facts either party to a contract is bound to disclose to the other.

¹ The question as to what facts which might influence the mind of one party it is the duty of the other, if knowing of them, to communicate, is one of great difficulty. It is discussed by Cicero in a well-known passage (De Offic. lib. iii. c. 12 et seq.); culpable concealment being in his opinion “cum quod tu scias id ignorare emolumenti tui causâ velis eos quorum intersit id scire.” c. 13. The limitation put by Grotius on this principle would probably be adopted by our law,

“non ergo generaliter sequendum illud ejusdem Ciceronis, celare esse, cum tu quod scias id ignorare emolumenti tui causâ velis eos quorum intersit scire: sed tum demum id locum habet, cum de iis agitur quæ rem subjectam per se contingunt.” De Jur. Belli ac Pacis, lib. ii. c. 12, s. 9. See also Pothier, Tr. du Contrat de Vente, Part II. chap. 2. Consider Blenkhorn v. Penrose, 29 W.R. 237; Ionides v. Pender, L.R. 9 Q. B. 531.

PART III.
Ch. xiv.Obligation to disclose.i. Where fiduciary relationship.

§ 706. The obligation to disclose arises in various ways.¹

(i.) Where the parties to a contract stand in some pre-existing relationship to one another of a fiduciary character (as, for example, the relation of agent and principal²), they can only deal after the most full disclosure. The relations of trustee and cestui que trust,³ solicitor and client, partner and partner, are all well known to be of a fiduciary kind. The cases arising out of such relationships show that when there is a non-disclosure of that which it is the plaintiff's duty to disclose, no specific performance can be granted.

ii. Where antecedent wrong done.

§ 707. (ii.) Sometimes the obligation to disclose may even arise from an antecedent wrong done by the one party to the other. "If," said Lord Hatherley, "a man knows that he has committed a trespass of a very serious character upon his neighbour's property, and finding it convenient to screen himself from the consequences, makes a proposal for the purchase of that property, he certainly ought to communicate to the person with whom he is dealing the exact state of the circumstances of the case:"⁴ and on that ground and under these circumstances specific performance was refused.

iii. From character
of contract.

§ 708. (iii.) Sometimes the obligation to disclose arises from the character of the contract itself. For there are certain contracts which are said to be uberimæ fidei: i.e., they are contracts which from their nature demand a full disclosure of all material facts by the one contracting party to the other: such are contracts for marine insurance, and contracts for the formation of a partnership. In these cases silence may be fraud.¹ So again, in the case of the contract between a company and a person taking shares, the Courts have held that there is an obligation to disclose material circumstances.²

¹ See Davies v. London & Provincial Marine Insurance Co., 8 Ch. D. 469, 474.

PART III.
Ch. xiv.

In the case of a contract for the sale of a chattel having a latent defect, there exists an obligation to disclose that defect.³

Latent defect.

§ 709. (iv.) Sometimes the obligation to disclose arises from the course of the negotiation itself.

iv. From course of negotiation.

It is evident that the making of one statement during a negotiation may create an obligation to make another: so, if in the course of a negotiation A. make a statement to B. which is false in fact and which A. subsequently discovers to be false, he is under an obligation to state that discovery; or if A. make a statement to B. which at the time is true but in the course of the negotiations becomes false, A. becomes under an obligation to state that change of fact to B.⁴

“When,” said Lord Blackburn, addressing the House of Lords, “a statement or representation has been made in the bonâ fide belief that it is true, and the party who has made it afterwards comes to find out that it is untrue, and discovers what he should have said, he can no longer honestly keep up that silence on the subject after that has come to his knowledge, thereby allowing the other party to go on, and still worse inducing him to go on, upon a statement which was honestly made at the time when it was made, but which he has not now retracted when he has become aware that it can be no longer honestly persevered in. That would be fraud too, I should say, as at present advised. And I go on further still to say, what is perhaps not quite so clear, but certainly it is my opinion, where there is a duty or obligation to speak, and a man in breach of that duty or obligation holds his tongue and does not speak, and does not say the thing he was bound to say, if that was done with the intention of inducing the other party to act upon the belief that the reason why he did not speak was because he had nothing to say, I should be inclined myself to hold that that was fraud also.”¹ statement.

§ 710. Again, entire silence can hardly deceive: but an imperfect statement may be a perfect untruth. For instance, if the owners of a business, desiring to sell it to a company, put out a prospectus containing various statements, each in itself correct, but keep silence on a material fact, it would seem well worthy of consideration whether these persons who were under no antecedent obligation to make any statement have not, by saying something, assumed an obligation to tell not only the truth but the whole truth.² So where a proposed creditor describes a transaction to the proposed sureties, the description may be evidence of a representation that there is nothing in the transaction that might not naturally be expected to take place between the parties to the transaction described.³

v. From obligation subsequent to the contract.

§ 711. (v.) Further, it must, to prevent confusion, be observed that there are obligations to disclosure which arise from the contract itself: as, for example, the obligation on a vendor of real estate honestly to disclose his title. This is a duty arising out of and subsequent to the contract, and the non-performance of this duty cannot constitute fraud dans locum contractui. With these we are not at present concerned.

PART III.
Ch. xiv.

§ 712. (vi.) Lastly, an obligation to disclosure may arise from statute. The 38th section of the Companies Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 131),¹ provides that "Every prospectus of a company, and every notice inviting persons to subscribe for shares in any joint-stock company, shall specify the dates and the names of the parties to any contract entered into by the company, or the promoters, directors, or trustees thereof, before the issue of such prospectus or notice, whether subject to adoption by the directors or the company, or otherwise; and any prospectus or notice not specifying the same shall be deemed fraudulent on the part of the promoters, directors, and officers of the company knowingly issuing the same, as regards any person taking shares in the company on the faith of such prospectus, unless he shall have had notice of such contract."

vi. Statutory obligation. Companies Act, 1867, s. 38.

§ 713. But it has never (it is believed) been held by our Courts that there is any general obligation to disclosure on the part of a vendor or purchaser of chattels or realty, though the person maintaining silence may know that the other party is acting under an erroneous impression. "Aliud est celare, aliud tacere: neque enim id est celare quicquid reticeas."²

Mere silence generally permissible in either party.

It has been justly observed by Mr. W. W. Story³

that "it is the general policy of the law, in order to induce vigilance and caution and thereby to prevent those opportunities of deceit which lead to litigation, to throw upon every man the responsibilities of his own contracts and to burden him with the consequences of his careless mistakes." "I am not aware," said Lord Chelmsford, addressing the House of Lords in the case of Peek v. Gurney,¹ "of any case in which an action at Law has been maintained against a person for an alleged deceit, charging merely his concealment of a material fact which he was morally but not legally bound to disclose." The case of Keates v. The Earl of Cudogan,² is an authority for the proposition that there is no obligation on a proposed lessor of a house in a ruinous and unsafe condition to inform the proposed lessee of its state. In *Horsfall v. Thomas*³ it was decided that the vendor of a chattel is under no obligation to disclose a patent defect. In *Smith v. Hughes*⁴ the Court of Queen's Bench determined that the passive acquiescence of the seller of chattels in the self-deception of the buyer does not entitle the latter to avoid the contract. Lastly, in Edwards-Wood v. Marjoribanks,⁵ a contract was made for the sale of an advowson, nothing being said or asked as to the income of the living, which was in fact subject to a charge in favour of the Governors of Queen Anne's Bounty, for repayment of a sum borrowed from them to rebuild the parsonage: the purchaser filed his bill for specific performance with compensation, but got a decree only for specific performance without compensation: and from this he ineffectually appealed, first to the Lords Justices, and lastly to the House of Lords.

§ 714. Again, as regards the purchaser, he is not under an obligation to communicate any circumstance which may enhance the value of the thing bought by him. So that, for instance, a man knowing of the existence of a mine under an estate may validly deal with the owner who is ignorant of this fact, without any communication of it.¹ And so where a first mortgagee, with power of sale, having entered into an arrangement not amounting to a binding contract for the advantageous sale of part of the mortgaged property, afterwards bought up at a reduced price the interest of the second mortgage without informing him of the arrangements for sale, a bill to set aside the sale by the second mortgage, on the ground of the suppression of information by the purchaser, was dismissed by Lord Romilly M.R., and subsequently by Lord Cranworth.² Nor is the purchaser liable to an action for deceit for misrepresenting the seller's chance of sale, or the probability of his getting a better price than that offered.³

purchaser.

§ 715. The case is however quite different when, in addition to silence, something is done by the one party to conceal from the other some fact material to that other party. Thus where a wall which required to be maintained against the Thames was industriously concealed, a bill for specific performance was dismissed, though without costs.⁴

Aggressive concealment.

So again where colliery-owners entered into a contract for the purchase of a farm adjoining their colliery not only without disclosing, but (it would seem) studiously concealing the fact, of which the vendors were at the time wholly ignorant, that they (the purchasers) had wrongfully taken 2,000 tons of coal from under the farm, the Court dismissed the purchasers' bill for specific performance, and on the vendors' bill ordered the contract to be cancelled.¹ This case, perhaps, turns on the fact that the thing concealed was a wrong done by the one party to the contract to the other. And where A. agreed to sell his land to B. at a halfpenny per square yard, which amounted to about 500*l.*, when the real value was 2,000*l.*, and the defendant asked the attorney whom he employed to calculate the amount before the contract was signed, not to tell the plaintiff how small it was, the Court granted an interlocutory injunction to stay proceedings at Law.² In *Hill v. Gray*³ the plaintiff had employed an agent to sell a picture, and the defendant bought it under the belief that it had belonged to a third person. The case has sometimes been thought to support the proposition that mere silence may be fraudulent. But in *Keates v. Earl of Cadogan*⁴ Jervis C.J. pointed out that the case really turned on the "aggressive deceit" on the part of the agent of the seller: and if the case cannot be supported on this ground it seems not to be law.⁵

On sale with all faults.

Even as regards a sale with all faults, the industrious and active concealment of faults would be fraudulent.⁶

Purchaser
may not make any false representation or suggestion.

§ 716. So, though the purchaser may keep silence as to the advantages of the estate, he must not go any further than silence. "A very little," said Lord Eldon, "is sufficient to affect the application of that principle. If a word, if a single word be dropped which tends to mislead the vendor, that principle will not be allowed to operate." Accordingly, in the case before his Lordship, the purchaser having made such suggestions of what was not true, the contract was set aside:¹ and in a case where a solicitor bought of a person in difficulties who was selling without professional advice, and untruly represented the nature and title of the property as such that no one but a professional man would purchase it, specific performance was refused.²

§ 717. It is possible that silence which would not constitute fraud may yet constitute such unfairness in a contract as to stay the hand of the Court. The case of Ellard v. Lord Llandaff,³ if it is to be supported on the ground of the silence of the lessee as to the fact that one of the lives in the surrendered lease was, at the time of signing the contract, in extremis, rests upon this principle: and was so put by Lord Manners in deciding it.⁴

not fraudulent, but unfair.

§ 718. The employment of a puffer at auctions is in some circumstances regarded as fraud, affecting the contract made at the auction. The cases prior to the recent legislation seem to fall under three heads.

Puffing at auctions.

§ 719. (i.) Where the sale is announced to be without reserve, this excludes any interference on the part of the vendor which can under any possible circumstances affect the right of the highest bidder to have the property knocked down to him, and that without reference to the amount to which the highest bidding shall go.⁵ Therefore the employment by the vendor in such a sale of one or more persons to keep up the price on his behalf amounts to fraud in the contemplation of the Court,¹ and is a bar to specific performance.² Where the vendors, assignees of an insolvent, put up his life interest in certain property for sale by auction without reserve, having previously entered into an arrangement with a person whose wife was interested in remainder, that he should bid 35,000*l.* and be the purchaser, unless a higher sum should be bid, and this fact was concealed, it was held to taint the sale to the defendant at the auction, though he purchased for 49,800*l.*³

All parties
having liberty to bid.

§ 720. The statement that a sale is without reserve may of course be modified by other statements: as in one case of a sale under the Court, where it was stated that the sale was without reserve, but that all parties to the suit had liberty to bid: the plaintiff bid against the purchaser and ran him up, and the Court of Appeal in Chancery held that the result of the two statements, though not very consistent, was such that the purchaser could not complain.⁴

ii. One puffer employed.

§ 721. (ii.) Where there is no declaration that the sale is without reserve, and no right of bidding is expressly reserved to the vendor, and he employs one person to prevent the property going at an under-value; this has been thought not to be fraud in the contemplation of a Court of Equity,⁵ though it clearly was in that of the Courts of Common Law.⁶ The distinction however was disapproved of, if not doubted, by Lord Cranworth in the case of Mortimer v. Bell.⁷

§ 722. Inasmuch as a contract, if originally void by the Common Law, ought not to be enforced by Equity, the defendant in a suit in the Court of Chancery for specific performance might avail himself of the defence furnished by this fraud at Law, and that formerly by means of a trial of the question at Law.¹

A defence in Chancery.

§ 723. (iii.) Even in the absence of any declaration that the sale is without reserve, the employment of two or more persons as puffers has in all Courts been considered fraudulent, inasmuch as only one person can be necessary to protect the property, and the employment of more can only be to enhance the price.²

iii. Several puffers.

§ 724. The decision in the case of Mortimer v. Bell above mentioned led to the passing of an Act of Parliament (the 30 & 31 Vict. c. 48), which was introduced by Lord St. Leonards.

The Sale of Land by Auction Act, 1867.

The 4th section of this Act enacts that, after the passing of the Act, whenever a sale by auction of land would be invalid at Law by reason of the employment of a puffer, the same shall be deemed invalid in Equity as well as at Law.

Section 4.

Land is defined to include hereditaments of whatever tenure: but the difference of the view of the Courts of Common Law and Equity as to fraud in auctions of chattels (if such difference exist) is left in its pristine vigour.

§ 725. The 5th section of the Act enacts that the particulars or conditions of sale by auction of any land shall state, (a) whether such land will be sold without reserve, or (b) subject to a reserved price, or (c) whether a right to bid is reserved: and

Section 5.

(a) If the land be sold without reserve, it is not lawful for the seller to employ any person to bid at such sale, or for the auctioneer to take knowingly any bidding from any such person.

(b) In the event of the land being sold subject to a reserved price the Act is silent, but it has been held that in the absence of express stipulation, it is not lawful to employ any person to bid up to the reserved price.¹

Section 6.

But (c) in the event of a reservation of a right to the seller to bid, it is lawful for him or for any one person on his behalf to bid at such auction in such manner as he may think proper (sect. 6).²

Fraud by agents.

§ 726. As with regard to misrepresentation, so with regard to fraud in general, delicate questions arise where the fraud alleged is that of the agent practised on third persons, and the principal is sued on the ground of deceit or for rescission by reason of such fraud.³ But in actions for specific performance these questions cannot arise. If the principal of the fraudulent agent were the plaintiff, he would not be at liberty to avail himself of that agency in part and repudiate it in the rest of the transaction: to such a case the well-established principle of Equity that innocent parties cannot derive benefits from the fraud of others⁴ would apply. If on the other hand the fraud were that of the defendant's agent, the plaintiff by suing on the contract would have waived the fraud and ratified the contract.

Agency of directors.

§ 727. A particular class of cases arising from the agency of directors and the fact that corporations are incapable of personal fraud has occupied much attention in the Courts of late years, and has evoked a considerable variation of opinion amongst the learned Judges.¹ But the question can hardly arise in cases of specific performance for the reason indicated in the last preceding section. PART III.

Ch. xiv.

§ 728. Will the fraudulent act of a mere stranger, to which the plaintiff was neither party nor privy, deprive him of his right to enforce the performance of a contract? The question has never, it is believed, been judicially answered. But upon the general equitable principle that no person though innocent can derive a benefit from the fraud of another, the contract, if resting absolutely in fieri, could not be enforced. If the plaintiff were an assign for value of the contract, or if the contract were partly performed, the conclusion might probably be different.² Fraud by a mere stranger.

§ 729. The foregoing passage was discussed by Kekewich J. in a recent case: There a mortgagee had brought an action for foreclosure or sale against the mortgagor, in which an order for sale was made, of which the mortgagee had the conduct. A., an agent for B., the owner of the equity of redemption, after the biddings of the defendant had gone beyond the reserve fund, bid without any intention of really performing the contract, which neither A. nor B. had the means to perform. As the result of these bids the defendant gave more than he would otherwise have done. The Court, without deciding whether the fraud of a stranger will or will not prevent specific performance in some circumstances, held that the conduct of A. did not.³ If the mere mistake of the defendant is a defence in specific performance,⁴ it would seem that mistake produced by the fraud or misconduct of a third party may also furnish a defence.

The fraud affects the entire
contract.

§ 730. The effect of fraud on the contract tainted by it extends to the entirety of the contract, though the fraud may only have arisen or been practised as regards one term or one part of that contract. Hence the party guilty of the fraud cannot enforce the contract to any extent even though he may waive the part affected by the fraud.

So does misrepresentation.

§ 731. The same results follow from misrepresentation, even though innocent.

In a case where there was a misrepresentation which the Judge considered not to have been wilful, but to have arisen from misunderstanding as to the surrender of a lease on part of the property which was to be exchanged, and the plaintiff offered to take the land subject to the lease, and thus, as he contended, to abide by the contract, exonerated from what was affected by the misrepresentation; so that the question distinctly arose whether the misrepresentation avoided the contract in toto or only quoad hoc; Plumer M.R. said, "there is no authority anywhere, no case where the Court has, when misrepresentation was the ground of a contract, decreed the specific performance of it; and nothing would be more dangerous than to entertain such a jurisdiction. The principle on which performance of an agreement is compelled, requires that it must be clear of the imputation of any deception. The conduct of the person seeking it must be free from all blame: misrepresentation, even as to a small part only, prevents him from applying here for relief. The reason of this is obvious: if it be so obtained, the contract is void both at Law and in Equity. When an agreement has been obtained by fraud, is the effect to alter it partially, to cut it down or modify it only? No; it vitiates it in toto; and the party who has been drawn in is totally absolved from obligation. If so, what equity has the other party, who, by his misconduct has lost one contract, to call on the Court for his benefit to make a new one? If the defendant were willing to consent to it, and to enter into a new agreement, it would be a different case; but if he refuses, if he insists that he is absolved from it, what equity can there be in favour of the other?"¹

§ 732. The view that fraud operates on the entire contract was adopted and approved by the Court of Appeal in Chancery in Rawlins v. Wickham,² which was a suit for rescission: where the defendant urged that justice would be done not by rescinding the contract, but by directing the representation to be made good: but the contention was rejected by Knight Bruce and Turner L.JJ., on the ground that the misrepresentation gave a right to avoid the entire contract.

Rawlins v. Wickham.

§ 733. The effect of fraud on the contract is two-fold. First, it renders the contract voidable at the election of the defrauded party: secondly, it operates as a personal bar to specific performance. These two effects are for many purposes distinguishable: for example, the right to rescind may be lost, and the right to object to specific performance may remain. These two effects will therefore be considered separately.

The two-fold effect of fraud.

§ 734. The first effect of fraud is to render the whole contract voidable, but voidable only. The contract is not void: it is not a nullity. "It is now well settled," said Lord Campbell C.J. in The Deposit and General Life Assurance Co. Registered v. Ayscough,³

PART III. “that a contract tainted by fraud is not void but only Ch. xiv. voidable at the election of the party defrauded.” It is valid till disaffirmed, not void till affirmed.¹

Consequences of contract's being voidable
only.

§ 735. From this distinction, many important consequences follow: it follows that the defrauding party is bound until the defrauded party elect to the contrary, and that he can never set up any invalidity in the contract: it follows that the defrauded party is equally bound, until he rescind:² it follows that the property the subject of the contract passes to the purchaser, whether defrauding or defrauded, until avoidance: it follows that all mesne dispositions by the defrauding party to third persons not parties or privies to the fraud are valid, so that third persons may acquire absolute interests and rights under the fraudulent contract;³ and lastly, it follows that the defrauded party may, by electing to be bound or by losing his right to repudiate, become absolutely bound by the contract.

How right to rescind may be precluded.

§ 736. The right of rescinding a contract may however be precluded or lost by any one of the following circumstances, viz., (i.) impossibility: (ii.) the vesting of an interest under the contract in an innocent person which renders rescission inequitable: (iii.) the election of the defrauded party to abide by the contract: or (iv.) the inability of the defrauded party to perform the obligation which rests upon him to make restitution on his part.⁴

i. Rescission impossible.

§ 737. (i.) The rescission has become impossible when its object is to get back something which is actually destroyed, as, e.g., if A. sought to rescind a contract for the sale of a sheep to B., which sheep B. had killed and eaten.¹

PART III.
Ch. xiv.

The rescission would be equally impossible, but for a legal and not a physical reason, if B. instead of killing the sheep had sold it: for the contract between A. and B., not being void, vested the property in B., and consequently before rescission B. could make a good title to C., and C. could hold free from any right of rescission in A.² It is too late for the defrauded vendor to declare his election to rescind when the property has passed from the fraudulent vendee to a third person.³

§ 738. (ii.) The rescission is inequitable when third persons innocent of the fraud have acquired interests under the contract, and such innocent persons would consequently be injured by its rescission. So in the great case arising out of Overend, Gurney & Co.'s failure, it was held by the House of Lords that the person who took shares by reason of a fraudulent misrepresentation could not after a winding-up order rescind this contract, and have his name removed from the list, because the creditors of the company had acquired an interest in the enforcement of the contract which, as they were innocent, the shareholder could not defeat by rescinding.⁴ This reasoning, of course, does not apply to private partnerships: to allow rescission against a company after winding up would be to interfere with the rights of creditors, whilst to permit it in the case of a private partnership leaves all their rights intact.⁵ equitable.

making a contract has but an election, and an election once determined is determined for ever.¹ Whether this election must be made within a reasonable time, or whether the party entitled to elect may do so at any time, unless he has in the meanwhile lost that right on some other ground, as, e.g., the acquisition of rights by third parties, is a question left open by the most recent case on this subject.² It is certain, however, that in the case of rescission for fraud, the election once determined in favour of the contract precludes any subsequent rescission.³

Contracts to take shares.

§ 740. In the case of contracts to take shares induced by a misrepresentation of the objects of the company, it is now determined that the date of the allotment of the shares is the very latest date to which the reasonable time for election extends.⁴

How election may be made.

§ 741. The election to abide by a contract may be by express words or may be inferred from acts done with a knowledge of the invalidity of the contract.⁵ The election is not necessarily formal or express.

Election
final.

As soon as the fraud is discovered the right to elect arises: and if this has been exercised by affirming the contract, the subsequent discovery of fresh incidents of the same fraud will not give rise to a new right to rescind.⁶

do the like on his part and make restitution: "Restitutio in integrum," said Lord Cranworth,¹ "can only be had where the party seeking it is able to put those against whom it is asked in the same situation in which they stood when the contract was entered into."

PART III.
Ch. xiv.

If by any act on his part, done even in ignorance of the fraud, the defrauded party has made this impossible, he cannot obtain rescission:² as, e.g., if A. has by fraud been induced to buy a sheep of B. and seeks the repayment of the money paid to B., he must offer to restore the sheep, and if he has himself killed the sheep he cannot seek such rescission,³ though he may still maintain his action against B. for the fraud practised on him. So, again, no fraud in bringing about a marriage settlement will enable the defrauded party after marriage to rescind it.⁴

In the case of Clarke v. Dickson,⁵ the plaintiff sought to rescind a contract for the sale of shares in a mine, and the following facts were held to be several grounds of objection all falling under this principle: (1) that he had held the shares for three years, and that they were not the same shares at the beginning of the time as at the end; (2) that he had received dividends; (3) that he had concurred in the conversion of the concern from a partnership on the cost-book principle, into a joint-stock corporation; and (4) that at the time of the offer to restore, the company was being wound up and all chance of profit was gone.

§ 743. In a more recent case in the House of Lords the plaintiff complained of fraud in inducing a contract on his part to take shares in an unincorporated banking company: and the circumstances that the plaintiff had in ignorance of the fraud taken part in proceedings to convert this company into an incorporated company, and that the company was in course of winding up, were held to preclude the plaintiff from rescission. Lord Cranworth thought that the former circumstance would of itself have been sufficient.¹

New-bigging.*

With these previous cases may profitably be compared the case of Adam v. Newbigging, also in the House of Lords.² There the plaintiff had been by misrepresentation induced to enter into a partnership with the defendant, and the plaintiff was held not to be precluded from rescinding the contract by reason of the concern's having gone from bad to worse during the time between the contract and the action.

Does the

of any benefit prevent rescission?

§ 744. The receipt of dividends before discovery of the fraud was relied upon in the case of Clarke v. Dickson,³ as precluding rescission; and there are other authorities to show that, at Common Law, the reception of any benefit under a contract will preclude its rescission for default of performance by the other party.⁴ But it is submitted that no such rule prevails where the rescission is on the ground of fraud, and that where a benefit has been received and is capable of restoration either in kind or by way of compensation, and the defrauded party offers such restoration, he has not lost his right to rescind.

For to return to the illustration of the sheep:—if, before the discovery of the fraud, A. has sheared the sheep, it appears reasonable to hold that such change in the condition of the sheep will not deprive A. of his right to rescind, if he offer to restore the sheep and account for the wool.

PART III.
Ch. xiv.

So, in Earl Beauchamp v. Winn,¹ the House of Lords Instances. held that the construction of a warping-drain and the inclosure of a common would not have prevented the rescission of a contract for the sale of the land on the ground of mistake: and in The Lindsay Petroleum Co. v. Hurd,² the Privy Council took the same view of the facts that possession had been taken under the contract and a trial well sunken. In that case the Court below had offered an account of the profit of the well, if any, which was not accepted.

seems to have never been decided. On the one side there are cases in which are found general statements of the law which imply that the impossibility of restoration from whatever cause is a bar to rescission.⁴ And it may be open to question whether any real distinction can be drawn between the innocent act of the defrauded party which precludes him from restoration, and the act of God, or of a third person, leading to a similar result. On the other side is the language of Crompton J. in Clarke v. Dickson,⁵ that "the true doctrine is that a party can never repudiate a contract after, by his own act, it has become out of his power to restore the parties to their original condition."

§ 746. As our law is far from clear on this point it may be useful to refer to the principles of French Law as expounded by Pothier.¹ According to him an action for rescission was not precluded by the change or destruction of the thing sold. If the destruction took place without the act of the plaintiff, he was not bound to do more than he could. If the horse had died, the plaintiff must give back his skin: if the cow sold had died of a contagious disease, and been buried, he need return nothing. If, on the other hand, the change or destruction was due to the act of the plaintiff, he was bound to account to the defendant for the value of the thing but did not lose his action.

§ 747. The right to rescind does not arise from an innocent misrepresentation, unless it be such as to show that there is a complete difference in substance between what was supposed to be and what was taken so as to constitute a failure of consideration.²

§ 748. It must not be assumed that in every case in which the right of rescission is lost, every other remedy in respect of the transaction is lost also. This is not the case. Thus a person induced to take shares by fraud may have lost the right of rescinding the contract, but may yet sue the deceiver for indemnity against the loss resulting from the contract.³ A principal authorizes an agent to buy shares at 3*l.* per share on the agent's representation that he can procure them for that price: the agent has in fact just bought them for 2%. a share: the principal having sold the shares before the discovery of the fraud cannot rescind the contract, but may sue the agent for the difference between 3% and 2% per share.¹

PART III.
Ch. xiv.

§ 749. The second effect of fraud on the contract is this: it “operates,” as expressed by Lord Lyndhurst, “as a personal bar to the relief.”² This is an operation independent of the rescission of the contract: and though there can be no doubt that, where the defrauded party has elected to be bound by the contract, he has also waived the right to insist on the personal bar, it does not follow that he has also lost the right to set up that bar where rescission has become impossible from the interests of third persons, or from the impossibility of restitution arising either from the act of God or of third persons or from his own act before knowledge of the fraud. In all these cases, it is conceived that the defendant might still urge the fraud as a bar to specific performance;—just as at Common Law he might, after having lost his right to rescind in any of the ways last indicated, maintain an action of deceit against the defrauding party.³

Fraud is a personal bar to relief.

An innocent misrepresentation may, as well as a fraudulent one, constitute a personal bar to relief.⁴

Innocent
misrepresentation.

§ 750. Where it appears that the execution of a contract in the manner insisted on by the plaintiff will result in a fraud upon the public, the Court will not enforce the performance of the defendant's part of the contract. CHAPTER XV.

OF MISTAKE.

§ 751. THERE being at least two parties to every contract, it follows that mistake may be, 1st, the mistake of the defendant alone; or 2ndly, the common mistake of both plaintiff and defendant; or 3rdly, the mistake of the plaintiff alone. The first and second species will require discussion, as grounds of defence to an action for specific performance; the second and third will both raise the question how far the plaintiff may enforce performance with a correction of the error. It will be necessary to consider mistake not only as a defence to a specific performance, but also to some extent as giving a plaintiff a right to a rescission or rectification of the contract.

PART III.
Ch. xv.
Kinds of mistake that occur in contracts.

§ 752. Mistake may be of such a character as in the view of a purely Common Law Court to avoid the contract on the ground of want of consent or of total failure of consideration.¹ But Equity does not confine the defence of mistake to these cases. The principle upon which it proceeds is this:—that there must be a contract legally binding, but that this is not enough, —that to entitle the plaintiff to more than his Common Law remedy, the contract must be more than merely legal. It must not be hard or unconscionable: it must be free from fraud, from surprise, and from mistake: for where there is mistake, there is not that consent which is essential to a contract in Equity: non videntur qui errant consentire.²

of the defence.

PART III.
Ch. xv.

Mistake sometimes, but not always,
a bar to performance.

§ 753. In some cases, mistake furnishes an absolute bar to specific performance: in other cases it affords no such ground, if the plaintiff be willing to make a reasonable compensation to the defendant for the mistake made: whether a given case falls within one or other of these categories depends on all its circumstances.¹

As to the Statute of Frauds.

§ 754. Again, the Statute of Frauds has not affected the situation of a defendant against whom specific performance is sought,² and it therefore leaves it open to him to produce any evidence for his purpose, which is not to establish a contract, but to rebut an equity which the plaintiff insists has arisen out of a contract.

Parol evidence admitted for defence.

§ 755. The cases of mistake have, it is true, seemed to present rather peculiar difficulties to the admission of parol evidence, because it has been argued that to do so is to overrule the Statute of Frauds and to contradict the writing by parol. Its admission is, however, the settled doctrine of the Court, and that not merely for purposes of defence to a specific performance, but, as we shall hereafter see, for the purpose of correcting the mistake. The question of its admission by way of defence was much debated in the case of the Marquis Townshend v. Stangroom,³ where Lord Eldon said, "It cannot be said, that because the legal import of a written agreement cannot be varied by parol evidence, intended to give it another sense, therefore in Equity, when once the Court is in possession of the legal sense, there is nothing more to inquire into. Fraud is a distinct case, and perhaps more examinable at Law: but all the doctrine of the Court as to cases of unconscionable agreements, hard agreements, agreements entered into by mistake or surprise, which therefore the Court will not execute, must be struck out, if it is true, that because parol evidence should not be admitted at Law, therefore it shall not be admitted in Equity upon the question, whether, admitting the agreement to be such as at Law it is said to be, the party shall have a specific execution, or be left to that Court, in which, it is admitted, parol evidence cannot be introduced.”¹ “No person,” said Lord Redesdale, “shall be charged with the execution of an agreement, who has not, either by himself or his agent, signed a written agreement; but the statute does not say that if a written agreement is signed, the same exception shall not hold to it that did before the statute.”²

§ 756. It follows from what has been stated, that where the defendant has been led into any mistake or error, the plaintiff cannot enforce the contract with the mistake. Therefore where, in a sale by auction, the plaintiff had induced the defendant, who was the vendor, to think that he should not bid, and so put him off his guard, and the estate was, by a misapprehension on the part of the person employed to make the reserved bidding, allowed to be knocked down to the plaintiff, the Court, on the ground of mistake, though there was no fraud, declined to enforce the sale.³ In another case, the estate was sold in lots: the particular stated that the timber on lots four and five was to be taken at a valuation: in addition to this, one of the conditions of sale specified that the purchaser was to take the timber (speaking generally without reference to any particular lot) at a valuation: Grant M.R. said that the express declaration as to lots four and five was so likely to mislead a purchaser as to the meaning of the conditions, that supposing that the right construction of the condition was that it applied to all the lots, it would be inequitable to enforce specific performance of the contract.¹ Again, where² on a sale by auction, the plan annexed to the particulars of the property (a house and grounds) showed a shrubbery on the western boundary, and the defendant, going to inspect the property before the sale with the plan in his hand, found on the western side a belt of shrubs with an iron fence outside it enclosing three ornamental trees, and he then bought the property, believing that the fence was the boundary, but the real boundary was a line of shrubs within the shrubbery and did not inclose the trees, the Court of Appeal held that the mistake was increased by at least crassa negligentia on the part of the vendors, and accordingly dismissed with costs their bill for specific performance.

§ 757. In the preceding cases, it will be observed that the plaintiff contributed to the mistake of the defendant: and there is no doubt that the circumstance that the plaintiff has by his words or his silence or in any way contributed to the error of the defendant, even though he may have done so unintentionally, greatly strengthens the defendant's case.³

purely of defendant.

§ 758. Even where the mistake is purely due to the defendant himself or his agent, the Court will in some cases refuse specific performance:⁴ indeed, it will sometimes furnish active assistance on the ground of the mistake of the party himself as well as of another, as is strongly shown by a case in which a professional man was held entitled as plaintiff to the rectification of an error in a deed of his own drawing.¹ The cases, too, on intoxication furnish an analogy to this doctrine: for that circumstance is a ground of defence, though it may have been in nowise brought about by the plaintiff.²

§ 759. On this principle, where a person, who was employed to bid for one of two distinct estates offered for sale at the same time and place, came into the auction-room, and after hearing the description of a lot which was perfectly different from that for which he was engaged to bid, kept bidding in a hasty and inconsiderate manner for, and ultimately purchased, this lot, which by his own gross mistake he thought to be the lot for which he was to bid, the Court refused specifically to carry out the sale.³ And where a vendor by mistake offered to sell an estate for 1,100*l.*, which figure he had by a wrong addition reached instead of 2,100*l.*, the Court refused the purchaser specific performance and dismissed his bill without costs.⁴

on the part of a vendor.

§ 760. So where a vendor had revoked the authority of the auctioneer as to part of the property, and the auctioneer inadvertently sold the whole, the Court refused specific performance, though the purchaser was justified in believing that he purchased all he claimed by his bill.⁵ Again, where a description of parcels was prepared by the vendor's solicitor from a previous description, which had been prepared by another solicitor on the report of a surveyor, and the description turned out to be erroneous as to quantity, the Court would not enforce the sale on the vendor, unless the case were one for compensation, and the purchaser would submit to it.¹ And where a vendor sold a manor, being at the time ignorant of its exact extent, and both parties at the time of the contract believed that what it included was something different from what it really did, and the manor proved to comprise valuable property that the vendor did not know to be within it, the purchaser's bill for specific performance was dismissed.²

§ 761. Where a defendant was tenant for life of an estate, under a settlement which contained a proviso, that if he purchased and settled an estate in fee simple in possession in some convenient place or places of a value equal to or greater than the estate comprised in the settlement, then this estate should become the property of the tenant for life; and he, imagining that he had, with the concurrence of his wife, an absolute power of disposition over the settled estate, entered into a contract for sale: Plumer V.C. refused to carry it into effect by an exercise of the proviso in the settlement, considering that such a performance of the contract would be attended with great difficulty, and that the defendant had not contracted for that purpose or with that intention.³

a bill was filed against the corporation, one ground upon which Knight Bruce L.J. dismissed an appeal against the corporation was this mistake of the agent.¹ It would open a wide field of defence if every misapprehension of the legal effect of a contract furnished a valid one. But perhaps the Court considers with more favour as a defence the allegation of mistake in an agent than in a principal.²

§ 763. Where there has been no misrepresentation, and there is no ambiguity in the terms of the contract, the defendant cannot be allowed to evade the performance of it by the simple statement that he has made a mistake.³ In a case before Lord Romilly M.R., where the defendant alleged that he misunderstood the particulars of sale, his Lordship observed that "if there appear on the particulars no ground for the mistake, if no man with his senses about him could have misapprehended the character of the parcels, then I do not think it is sufficient for the purchaser to swear that he made a mistake or that he did not understand what he was about."⁴ And so where, according to the true construction, the contract made the intended lease determinable at the option of either party, but the lessee insisted that he signed it in the belief that it gave the option to him only, the Court overruled the defence based on the alleged mistake.⁵

§ 764. So again where the property sold (an inn and shop) was described in the particulars as consisting of Nos. 454 and 455 on the tithe map, containing by admeasurement 20 perches more or less, and in the occupation of Mrs. K. and Mr. S.,—all which statements were correct,—and correct plans of the property were exhibited at the auction; and the purchaser deposed that he did not see the plans, but had known the property from his boyhood, and bought it in the belief that it included two plots of garden ground which had for many years been occupied with the gardens behind the inn and shop respectively; it was held by Baggallay L.J. (sitting for Malins V.C.) and by the Court of Appeal that the purchaser was not entitled to be released from his bargain.¹ “If,” said James L.J., “a man will not take reasonable care to ascertain what he is buying, he must take the consequences. . . . It is not enough for a purchaser to swear ‘I thought the farm sold contained twelve fields which I knew, and I find it does not include them all,’ or ‘I thought it contained 100 acres and it only contains 80.’ It would open the door to fraud if such a defence was to be allowed. Perhaps some of the cases on this subject go too far, but for the most part the cases where a defendant has escaped on the ground of a mistake not contributed to by the plaintiff, have been cases where a hardship amounting to injustice would have been inflicted upon him by holding him to his bargain, and it was unreasonable to hold him to it.”²

§ 765. Indeed, it seems on general principles clear that one party to a contract can never defend himself against it by setting up a misunderstanding on his part as to the real meaning and effect of the contract, or any of the terms in which it is expressed. To permit such a defence would be to open the door to perjury and to destroy the security of contracts. Whether the objection to such evidence is derived from the doctrine that every person who becomes a party to a contract, contracts to be bound in case of dispute by the interpretation which a Court would put on the language used, or from any other doctrine, the objection seems to be certainly valid.¹

PART III.
Ch. xv.

§ 766. So the mistake purely of one party to a contract not induced by the other will often fail as a ground for rescinding the contract by the party making the mistake. So where the defendants sold to the plaintiffs 100 chests of tea ex Star of the East, and the sale was made by a sample produced by the defendants as from that ship, when in fact it had nothing to do with that cargo, and the defendants gave notice that they would on that account treat the contract as void, the Court of Queen's Bench determined that there was no equity in the defendants simply to rescind the contract.²

Mistake of one party as ground for rescission.

§ 767. Again, the mistake of the defendant may be a reason for putting the plaintiff to his election either to have his action dismissed, or to take performance of the contract as it was understood by the defendant.³

Mistake of one party a ground for election.

§ 768. We may now proceed to consider the effect of a parol variation set up by the defendant as a ground for refusing the specific performance of a written contract alleged by the plaintiff. It depends on the particular circumstances of each case whether the variation "is to defeat the plaintiff's title to have a specific performance, or whether the Court will perform the contract, taking care that the subject-matter of this parol agreement or understanding is also carried into effect, so that all parties may have the benefit of what they contracted for."⁴

PART III.
Ch. XV.i. Where enforced.

§ 769. (i.) Where the parol variation set up by the defendant shows that after the parties to the contract had mutually agreed with one another, an error occurred in the reduction of the contract into writing, and it appears that the written contract varied according to the defendant's contention represents the true contract between the parties, the Court will, it seems, enforce specific performance of the contract so varied.

Instances.

§ 770. Thus, where a bill was brought for the specific performance of a contract to grant a lease at a rent of 9% per annum, and the defendant insisted that it ought to have been a term of the contract that the plaintiff should pay all taxes: Lord Hardwicke granted specific performance, and directed that the terms of the verbal contract should be carried into effect by the covenants to be inserted in the lease.¹ Again, where a bill prayed the execution of a contract for the sale of an estate, and the defendant resisted, and proved parol declarations by the auctioneer as to a right of common, and that previously to the sale the particular had been altered as to a certain right of common; the plaintiff proposed that his bill should be dismissed, but Lord Eldon pursued the course which the defendant insisted on, which was specifically performing the contract as contended for by the defendant, thus saving the expense of a cross-bill by him.²

ii. Where action dismissed.

§ 771. (ii.) But where the mistake or parol variation set up by the defendant does not show a mere mistake in the reduction of the contract into writing, but that one party understood one thing and the other another, there is no such contract as the Court will enforce, and the plaintiff's action is consequently dismissed.

Therefore, where the Court thought that the plaintiff and defendant had both been mistaken in a contract which contained certain ambiguous conditions as to the payment for timber, the bill was dismissed.¹

§ 772. The same result follows where, from any other circumstance, the enforcement of the parol variation set up by the defendant would be unfair on either party. Accordingly, where the plaintiff set up a contract which the defendant successfully resisted by parol evidence of a subsequent contract, and the plaintiff insisted on a performance of the contract so set up; Strange M.R. refused to grant it, on the grounds that it would be a surprise on the defendant to insist, under the prayer for general relief, on the performance of a contract which was not put in issue by the record, and that the plaintiff had really caused the litigation by his refusal to adopt the real contract.² Again, where the defendant proved a parol variation, and a great lapse of time had occurred, and compensation in respect of the term in dispute must have been allowed, if the contract had been enforced, for the period whilst the doubt about the terms of the contract had been subsisting, the plaintiff's bill was dismissed, but without costs.³

So in Lindsay v. Lynch,⁴ where the plaintiff had refused throughout to adopt the contract which the defendant admitted, the bill was dismissed, but without prejudice to another bill.

§ 773. (iii.) Where, as is often the case, the Court does not decide that the parol variation falls clearly under either of the previous cases, but merely that the defendant contracted under mistake, it puts the plaintiff to his election either to have his action dismissed, or to have the contract executed with the parol variation.¹

Higginson
v. Clowes.

§ 774. Thus, in Higginson v. Clowes,² where the conditions of sale were likely to have misled the defendant, and the defendant contended for a different construction from that of the plaintiff, Grant M.R. offered the plaintiff either to have his bill dismissed, or to have the contract executed on the defendant's construction. The counsel for the defendant contended that it was not competent to the plaintiff to have his bill dismissed, but that the defendant, without filing a cross-bill, might have a specific performance of the contract. Grant M.R., however, held that that right existed where the defendant's construction was adopted by the Court, but that where, as in the case before him, the Court did not decide that the defendant's construction was right, but only that he had contracted under a mistake created by the plaintiff, the bill was merely dismissed. In a subsequent suit³ on the same contract, where the parties were inverted, Plumer V.C., holding that there had been a mistake on both sides, refused specific performance on the construction of the defendant in the first suit.

§ 775. In Ramsbottom v. Gosden,⁴ where the written contract confined a reference of expenses to those of conveyance, but the defendant proved by the parol evidence of the attorney that it was the intention of both parties that the plaintiff, who was the purchaser, should also pay the expenses of making out the defendant's title, Grant M.R. put the plaintiff to his election, either to have the contract performed in the § 776. In a case where parol evidence was admitted on behalf of the defendants to show that a contract by several persons to enter into bonds in 1,500*l.* ought to have been for one joint bond in that amount by all; Plumer V.C. left it to the plaintiff to have his bill dismissed, or to take a decree for the joint bond, or to take an issue on which the witnesses could be examined.²

Moore*,³ where a landlord sought specific performance of a contract for a lease, and the defendant set up a parol contract to abate the rent, to which the plaintiff at the bar submitted, the lease was directed with the abatement and each party was left to bear his own costs: and in another case, where it appeared that, in addition to the written contract, there had been an understanding between the agent of the plaintiff and the defendant as to payment for timber and certain expenses, the plaintiff consenting to adopt the terms as part of his contract, specific performance was granted.⁴

against such party except with such condition included.¹ And where a plaintiff sought relief on the ground of a covenant for renewal, which had for one hundred and fifty years been acted on in a manner different from its terms,—namely, by continually increasing the fine, and not the rent: the Court held that the covenant could not be carried into execution according to its original terms, but might be on the plaintiff's submitting to a conscientious modification of it, to meet the circumstances of the case.² In this instance acquiescence, and not mistake, was the ground of the variation.

Variation
how set up.

§ 779. The parol variation may be alleged by the plaintiff for the purpose of offering the defendant his election;³ or it may be set up by the defendant by way of defence. If, in the absence of its being thus alleged, it comes out on the evidence, the Court will inquire into it before disposing of the case.⁴ The Court will do the same where the variation is alleged by the defendant, and so far proved as to raise a suspicion of its existence, and yet not to satisfy the Court.⁵

Evidence.

§ 780. From the great danger which would otherwise arise, the Court will not allow a person to escape from a written contract on slight parol evidence of mistake on his own part. So in one case Lord Hatherley (then V.C.) said that the oath of the defendant that he had inserted in his letter a term which he in fact omitted, and the oath of his agent that he had received instructions to the like effect, in letting the house, would not have sufficed; but the defendant having in his letter referred to the offer as having been previously made to another party, and that party swearing that in the offer as made to him the term omitted in the subsequent offer was contained, the Court held that sufficient evidence of mistake on the defendant's part had been given, and allowed the defence.¹

PART III.
Ch. xv.

§ 781. The common error or mistake of both parties as to the subject-matter of the contract is, on the principles already stated, a clear ground for resisting specific performance: so where the plaintiff being entitled to estates during the life of A. entered into a contract with regard to the timber on the estates with the remainderman; and it subsequently appeared that A. was at the time dead, though this circumstance was unknown to both parties; Lord Romilly M.R., and afterwards the Lords Justices, refused specific performance and dismissed the bill with costs.²

error.

§ 782. Further, where both parties to a contract are at the time of the contract in mistake or error as to the matters in respect of which they are contracting, this will not only furnish a ground for resisting specific performance, but enable the Court to rescind the contract.³

in the possession of Groombridge. Lord Thurlow, in giving judgment, said, "No doubt, if one party thought he had purchased bonâ fide, and the other party thought he had not sold, there is a ground to set aside the contract, that neither party may be damaged; because it is impossible to say one shall be forced to give that price for part only which he intended to give for the whole, or that the other shall be obliged to sell the whole for what he intended to be the price of part only."

Instances of rescis-
sion.

§ 784. Again, where both vendor and purchaser of an alleged estate in fee in remainder on an estate tail were ignorant that at the time the tenant in tail had suffered a recovery, so that in fact no estate in remainder existed, the Court rescinded the contract.¹

And where A. proposed certain terms of assurance to the agent in London of a Scotch insurance office, and by mistake wrote down other terms in his proposal, to which proposal the Scotch office assented, the Court at the instance of A. (refusing to reform the contract) rescinded it, and directed the repayment of the premiums paid.²

§ 785. Again, mistake of the plaintiff produced by the innocent misrepresentation of the defendant,³ or by the defendant's not doing his duty in respect of the contract, may be ground for rescission.⁴ In a case where the vendor described the garden of a house as inclosed by a rustic wall with a tradesman's side entrance: and knew but did not disclose that the wall was no part of the property sold, and that the tradesman's entrance was used only by sufferance, the Court rescinded the contract.

Lords on appeal from Ireland, the appellant believing himself to be a stranger to a fishery agreed to take a lease of it: the respondents believing themselves to be entitled to the property agreed to grant the lease: it turned out that the appellant was entitled to the property and not the respondents, and the House declared that the contract was entered into by the parties to it under mistake and in ignorance of the actually existing rights and interests of the parties in the fishery, and that the contract was not binding in Equity upon the appellant and respondents, but ought to be set aside subject to certain terms which the special circumstances of the case and the principles of good conscience were held to impose.¹

PART III.
Ch. xv.

§ 787. But where neither party to the contract is in error as to the matters in respect of which they are contracting, and there is an actually concluded contract, but there is an error common to both the parties in the reduction of the contract into writing, there the Court interferes for the purpose of reforming the contract, and not of rescinding it.² For by so doing neither party will be damaged: whereas by enforcing it as it stood, one party would be necessarily injured; and by rescinding it, both would be deprived of the benefit of the contract.

§ 788. Accordingly in a case already stated, where the question was whether a certain seven acres were or were not included in the contract, Lord Thurlow, after stating that if the parties to the contract had mistaken each other in this respect, it must be rescinded, said: "Upon the other hand, if both understood the whole was to be conveyed, it must be conveyed. § 789. The jurisdiction of the Court in this respect was clearly asserted by Lord Hardwicke in the case of Henkle v. Royal Exchange Assurance Co.,² which was a bill seeking, after the loss, so to rectify a policy, on the ground of common mistake, as to turn the loss on the insurer, which but for such variation must have been borne by the insured. “No doubt,” said his Lordship, “but this Court has jurisdiction to relieve in respect of a plain mistake in contracts in writing, as well as against frauds in contracts; so that if reduced into writing contrary to intent of the parties, on proper proof that would be rectified:” but for want of such proper proof the bill was dismissed.

Baker v.
Paine.

§ 790. In another case, before the same Judge, the captain of an East India ship, by articles of agreement, bargained and sold all his china ware and merchandize, brought home in his last voyage, to the defendant: the articles of agreement were drawn up, from minutes made by the parties, by an attorney, who, misunderstanding the transaction, drew up the articles in an erroneous and absurd manner: the captain, who was the party aggrieved by the error, brought his bill for an account of what was due on the contract, and insisted on its rectification: he was allowed to give parol evidence of the error and of the usage of trade to show the nature of the real transaction and the consequent mistake in the articles.³

§ 792. It equally follows that the mistake of one party to a contract can never be a ground for compulsory rectification, so as to impose on the second party the erroneous conception of the first.³ The error of the plaintiff alone may, however, be a ground for putting the defendant to elect between having the transaction annulled altogether or submitting to the rectification of the deed in accordance with the plaintiff's intention.⁴

proved is that the concurrent intention of all the parties to the contract was different from that expressed by the written contract, the Court will attentively regard the admission or denial of the defendant as one of those parties.¹ It need scarcely be added that the Court will only act on parol evidence when satisfied that there is no existing writing which contains the original instructions or contract.²

Latent ambiguity.

§ 795. Where there is a writing by which an executed deed is to be rectified, and in that writing there is a term in respect of which there is a latent ambiguity, parol evidence may be admitted to explain it, and thus assist in the rectification of the deed.³

Division
of mistakes.

§ 796. Mistakes are usually divided into mistakes of fact⁴ and of law. The former kind have always been held to give occasion to the jurisdiction of Equity in mistake.

Mistakes
of law.

§ 797. As regards mistakes of law, the maxim usually referred to was Ignorantia legis non excusat: and the older authorities seem to show that Courts of Equity would neither set aside contracts for mistake in law,⁵ nor allow such mistake to be set up as ground for resisting specific performance of contracts in other respects free from objection.⁶

¹ 6 Ves. 334; Mortimer v. Shorhall, 2 Dr. & War. 363, 374. In Pitcairn v. Ogbourne, 2 Ves. Sen. 375, 379, the evidence was considered sufficient to overcome the defendant's denial. § 798. This view of the law was thus stated by Lord Chelmsford in addressing the House of Lords in 1858:¹—"Mistake is undoubtedly one of the grounds for equitable interference and relief: but then it must be mistake not in matters of law, but a mistake of facts. The construction of a contract is clearly matter of law; and if a party acts upon a mistaken view of his rights under a contract, he is no more entitled to relief in Equity than he would be at Law."²

Misrepre-
sentation
of law.

§ 800. Recent decisions, however, have lessened if not destroyed the importance of the distinction between mistakes of fact and of law. In *Stone v. Godfrey*⁴ Turner L.J. said that he felt no doubt that the Court had power to relieve against mistakes in law as well as mistakes in fact.

own land agreed to take a lease of it, and was relieved from his mistake, his belief was founded on an erroneous impression of the effect of certain documents of title: and Lord Westbury said: "It is said Ignorantia juris haud excusat: but in that maxim the word jus is used in the sense of denoting general law, the ordinary law of the country. But when the word jus is used in the sense of denoting a private right, that maxim has no application. Private right of ownership is matter of fact: it may be the result also of matter of law: but if parties contract under a mutual mistake and misapprehension as to their relative and respective rights, the result is, that that agreement is liable to be set aside as having proceeded upon a common mistake."¹

Lord Chelmsford in Earl Beauchamp v. Winn.

§ 803. In Earl Beauchamp v. Winn, Lord Chelmsford in addressing the House said "that the ignorance imputable to the party was of a matter of law arising upon the doubtful construction of a grant. This is very different from the ignorance of a well-known rule of law. And there are many cases to be found in which Equity, upon a mere mistake of the law, without the admixture of other circumstances, has given relief to a party who has dealt with his property under the influence of such mistake."²

Result of the authorities.

§ 804. It seems to follow that, at least as a defence to specific performance, common error of law of both parties, or even the sole error of the defendant, when resulting in mistake important to both parties to the contract as to some of the matters dealt with by the contract, would be sufficient. But it is submitted that neither the common error of both parties nor the sole error of the defendant as to the operation and effect of the contract can be a ground for resisting specific performance.³

§ 805. Again, as in cases of hardship the turning of events in a way different from what the parties anticipated will not furnish a ground of defence; so in regard to mistake, if persons choose to speculate upon facts, and the view on which they acted proves to be a mistaken one, that circumstance will furnish no defence on which the Court will act.¹

PART III.
Ch. xv.

Speculation as to facts.

§ 806. Where there is a mistake of both parties, but not about the very subject of the contract, it will not be a ground for rectifying the contract. Therefore where both parties were under a mistake as to the duration of a leasehold interest, so that the price was considerably less than if the actual extent of the interest had been known, and the vendors filed a bill asking for a reassignment of the extra term which the purchasers took under the assignment, Knight Bruce V.C. held that the lease was the substance sold and not a term of the supposed duration, and that the vendors ought to have known what was the condition of the property they proposed to sell, and accordingly dismissed the bill.²

Mistake not about the essence of the contract.

§ 807. In like manner the Roman jurists held that mistake as to the substance of the thing avoided the contract: but if there be only a difference in some quality or accident, though the misapprehension may have been the actuating motive, yet the contract remains binding.³

The Roman law.

§ 808. The Court, on a clear principle, will not interfere for the rectification of a written contract where it was by the intention of the parties to it that the writing did not comprise all the terms of the actual contract; for what is done on purpose is evidently not done by mistake. Therefore where there was a contract for an annuity, and the parties to it designedly omitted a proviso for redemption, thinking it would render the transaction usurious, the Court refused to rectify the deed.¹ The parties “desired the Court,” said Lord Eldon,² “not to do what they intended, for the insertion of that proviso was directly contrary to their intention, but they desired to be put in the same situation as if they had been better informed, and consequently had a contrary intention.”³

quent

contract.

§ 809. Where the parol variation which the plaintiff or defendant seeks to set up is a subsequent contract in parol between the parties to a written contract, the case in nowise comes within the doctrine of mistake, and the parol variation is inadmissible under the Statute of Frauds, except in cases where the refusal to perform it might amount to fraud.⁴

Therefore where A., by writing, agreed with B. to grant him a lease, to commence on the 21st of April, B. being merely the agent of C.; and subsequently A. and C. agreed by parol that the lease should commence from the 24th of June instead of the 21st of April, and be made to C. instead of to B., and C. and B. sought a specific performance of the written contract as varied by the subsequent parol one, a plea of the Statute of Frauds was necessarily allowed.⁵ And where there was a contract in writing, and the defendant set up a subsequent parol contract, by which the parties mutually abandoned the terms of the written contract and then agreed upon new terms; Grant M.R. held that these new terms were merely meant to modify or add to the terms of the original contract; that therefore the parol contract could not be set up as a waiver of the first, and that the subsequent terms not having been in any way acted on, the second contract formed no defence to the first, the execution of which he accordingly directed.¹ Again, where the written contract was silent as to restrictive covenants, but there was some evidence of a subsequent contract to take the lease subject to a certain restrictive covenant as to trade, the Statute of Frauds was held to be a bar to the performance which the plaintiff sought of this subsequent parol contract.²

§ 811. The question how far a plaintiff can enforce specific performance of a contract with a parol variation, or in other words, with a rectification of a mistake, was on the authorities before the Judicature Act, 1873, not perfectly clear: but the weight of authority appeared to be in favour of the proposition that a plaintiff could not sue for the specific performance of a contract with a parol variation. This is now altered by the statute above referred to.³

Specific performance, with rectification of mistake.

Before proceeding to consider the cases on this point, we may briefly advert to principles.

§ 812. With regard to a mistake of the plaintiff alone, it is at once obvious that to allow him to correct this mistake, and enforce the contract so corrected on the other party to it, would be a great injustice.

Mistake of plaintiff alone.

§ 813. With regard, however, to a mistake of both parties to a contract in the reduction of the contract into writing, there can be no objection in point of justice to the plaintiff asking to have that mistake corrected, and to have the real contract carried into execution.

Mistake of both parties.

³ A fuller discussion of this question than that following will be found in the earlier editions of this work. The Judicature Act has seemed to justify a briefer treatment of it.

PART III.
Ch. xv.Mistake in reference to Statute of Frauds.

§ 814. It may be said that a plaintiff seeking to correct and enforce a contract which is within the Statute of Frauds is suing in contravention of that Act. But the objection seems untenable. For every action to correct by parol evidence a written contract, whether executed or executory, is in some sense a suing on the contract: yet the jurisdiction of Equity in cases of mistake in written contracts is clear. Mistake, like fraud,¹ must be deemed an exception to the statute in Equity.

Cases of

clusion of parol evidence for

§ 815. There was, however, a series of cases which seemed to establish the proposition, that in the Court of Chancery a plaintiff could not be allowed to sue for the specific performance of a contract with a parol variation. The principal of the cases were Rich v. Jackson, before Lord Rosslyn;² Woollam v. Hearn, before Sir W. Grant;³ Clinan v. Cooke, before Lord Redesdale;⁴ *Squire v. § 816. This current of authorities, however strong, can yet scarcely be considered uniform in favour of the position that the plaintiff could never avail himself of a parol variation. § 817. The great American jurists, Mr. Justice Story and Chancellor Kent, were likewise clear in their opinion that a Court of Equity ought, if necessary, at one and the same time, to reform and enforce a contract.⁶

§ 818. Now this vexed question has, it is believed, been finally solved by the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 24, sub-s. 7. That statute requires the High Court in any cause to grant all such remedies whatsoever as any of the parties thereto may appear to be entitled to in respect of any and every legal and equitable claim properly brought forward by them respectively in such cause, so that so far as possible all matters in controversy between the said parties respectively may be completely and finally determined and all multiplicity of legal proceedings concerning any of such matters avoided. Under this provision the High Court has entertained an action for the reformation of a contract, and for the specific performance of such reformed contract, in a case in which the Statute of Frauds did not create a bar.⁷

rectified, and then obtained consequential relief: as where a bond and deposit of deeds were given to secure an advance, and the bond by mistake appeared to be usurious; the plaintiff proved the mistake, had the bond rectified, and was held entitled to the consequential relief to which an ordinary obligee and equitable mortgagee is entitled.¹ In another case a client entered into a contract with his solicitor for the payment of a fixed sum of money in lieu of costs, and the contract contained mistakes as to the name and rights of the client, which, if construed strictly, would have excluded the solicitor from all rights under the contract. In consequence of these mistakes, the solicitor by his bill alleged that he had no remedy at Law, and accordingly prayed that the contract might be rectified, and an order made for payment of the sum of money under the contract, as if at the time of its execution it had expressed the intention of the parties: the Court made a decree directing the payment of the money.²

in contract.

§ 820. It may here be added that a misdescription in the contract may be attributable to (i.) the plaintiff alone, or (ii.) the defendant alone, or (iii.) both parties; and in either of the former cases it may be either fraudulent or innocent. If it be fraudulent, the party guilty of the fraud of course cannot avail himself of it in any way: if it be innocent, then (i.) if it be attributable to the plaintiff alone and induce mistake, it falls under the head of mistake induced by the plaintiff;³ (ii.) if it be attributable to the defendant alone, it comes under the head of mistake purely due to the defendant;⁴ and lastly (iii.) if it be attributable to both parties, it falls under the head of common error or mistake.⁵

CHAPTER XVI.

OF THE INCAPACITY OF THE COURT TO PERFORM PART OF THE CONTRACT.

§ 821. THE Court will not, as a general rule, compel specific performance of a contract, unless it can execute the whole contract; or, as Lord Romilly M.R. expressed it, "This Court cannot specifically perform the contract piecemeal, but it must be performed in its entirety if performed at all."¹ It often therefore becomes important to inquire whether a contract is entire or divisible, or, in other words, what is the whole contract which must be executed; and it is proposed in the present chapter, first, to inquire what contracts are divisible; secondly, to illustrate the general doctrine of the Court above stated; and, thirdly, to consider the exceptions or apparent exceptions to the rule.

PART III.
Ch. xvi.
Subject
of the chapter.

§ 822. It is obvious that the decision of the question whether a contract is entire or divisible, must depend on the particular nature of each contract, and the terms in which it is concluded: but some general rules may be gathered from the cases.

Contract
divisible or not.

§ 823. A contract for the sale of property in one lot will generally be considered indivisible. Thus, in a case where two undivided seventh shares of land were sold in one lot, the Court refused to enforce specific performance where a good title could be made to one seventh only:² and the purchaser of the entirety will,

Ch. XVI.

of course, not be compelled to take six undivided seventh parts of the estate.¹ And so in a case, where two persons were owners of an estate in undivided moieties, and the plaintiff sought to enforce an alleged contract by them to lease the coals under it, but could not prove any such contract against one of the owners, one ground on which the bill was dismissed against the other owner also was that he had never contracted to lease one share alone. If he had held himself out and contracted as the owner of the whole, then the case would have been different.²

Ship and freight.

§ 824. But where properties are of two descriptions,—as, for example, a ship and the freight,—the fact that they are both included in one instrument, and dealt with for one entire sum, does not seem conclusively to render the contract indivisible.³

Distinct lots.

§ 825. After some vacillation in the older cases,⁴ it has been decided at Common Law, that where property is sold in distinct lots, there is a separate contract for each lot,⁵ each buyer having a complete right of action after he is declared the purchaser of each lot.⁶ And in Equity the same is primâ facie the case, so that, in the absence of special circumstances, a vendor is entitled to compel the purchaser of two lots to complete his purchase of the one, though he may fail in making out a title to the other.⁷ But where from the nature of the contract, or the property that is the subject of it, or upon matters known to both parties, one of them can prove that the one transaction was dependent on the other, the two form one contract, although there may be no express statement to that effect.¹ And the parties by their subsequent dealing may convert two or more distinct contracts into an entire one, as by entering into one contract for the sale of the several subject-matters at one aggregate price.² Thus, where A. purchased by auction three lots of 100 shares each, and after the sale received the shares, paid the price, and received a bill of parcels describing the transaction as a sale of 300 shares: it was held, that as each lot was knocked down there was a distinct contract for the sale of 100 shares, but that the subsequent dealings showed that the parties treated the transaction as one entire sale of 300 shares.³

§ 826. The mere fact of different prices being fixed for different parts of the subject-matter of the contract, will not necessarily make it divisible: so where a person went into a shop and bought various goods at distinct prices for each, the contract was still held to be single.⁴ And where one price was fixed for the land, and another (a valuation price)⁵ for the timber, and the vendor could not show a title to all the timber by reason of the copyhold tenure of parts of the estate, which were not distinguishable from the freehold; the Court held that that was only one contract, that consequently the vendor was only bound to make out the title according to the contract, and that the title to the land was the title to the timber;—and, as the conditions of sale provided for the copyhold tenure as to the lands, the contract was enforced as a whole.⁶

§ 827. In a case in which, by the same contract, A. Cross contracted to sell an estate to B., and B. contracted to sell another estate to A., the contracts in respect of the two estates were held to be independent of one another;¹ whilst in a case of cross contracts for the sale of goods, the Court of Exchequer held the contracts dependent.²

Stipulation for piecemeal execution.

§ 828. Where the contract itself contains a provision for its piecemeal execution, the contract is treated as divisible. So in a building contract, where the landowner agreed to grant separate leases of separate plots as and when the buildings on each plot reached a certain stage, it was held that the contract might be performed in separate parts, and that it was no answer to the builder or his assign who sued for its performance as regards one plot to show that it was not performed by the builder as regards other plots.³

Contemporaneous
contracts.

§ 829. In like manner, where there are two contemporaneous contracts which the parties intended to be separated, the Court will treat them as separate, and will not allow an objection to the one contract to bar the performance of the other.⁴

Court will not perform part.

§ 830. It is, as we have already seen, a principle of the Court, that it will not compel specific performance of executory contracts unless it can at the time execute the whole contract on both sides. On this principle, where there was a contract between two neighbouring landholders to change the course of a stream, and one of the terms of the contract was that, if any damage should accrue to the lands of the defendant from a dam which was agreed to be erected, the plaintiff would give an equivalent in land to the defendant, the quantity of land to be ascertained by arbitrators; this being a thing which the Court could not do in præsenti, and the Court holding that the parties entering into a covenant to do it would not be a specific performance of the contract, the bill was dismissed, as the whole contract could not be carried into effect.¹ And where the owner of a patented invention entered into a contract with certain persons, who with himself were to form a company, to the promotion of which he was to give his services for two years, and he was to do his best to improve the invention for the benefit of the company, and on the refusal of these persons to go forward with the company, the patentee filed a bill for the specific performance of the contract: the Court held, on demurrer, that as it would have been impossible to enforce against the plaintiff the stipulations on his part, he could not sue for performance; and further, that the Court could not carry the contract into effect by directing the parties to execute a deed, for the contract was to do certain acts, and not to execute covenants to do them.²

§ 831. So, again, where a contract was entered into by a shipbuilder to alter a ship, and it was agreed that in default of performance by him the owners might enter and make the alterations: default was made by the shipbuilder, whereupon the owners filed a bill to enforce their right to enter and make the alterations: but on demurrer the bill was dismissed.³

Merchants' Trading Co. v. Banner.

§ 832. So wherever that which the plaintiff is to give as the consideration moving from him is something to be done at a future time, and which the Court cannot enforce, specific performance of the contract will be refused.⁴

Consideration a future act.

§ 833. The principle that the Court will not partially enforce contracts is illustrated by many other cases. Thus, where there was a partnership contract for an absolute term of years, leaving undefined the amount of capital and the manner in which it was to be provided, this being a contract which in its entirety the Court could not enforce, the Court refused to enforce it in part, by refusing the representatives of a deceased partner a decree for the dissolution of the partnership and the sale of the partnership property.¹ And in another case the Court refused to separate the parts of an award which were capable of specific performance from those which were not.²

Fossick.*

§ 834. It is, as will have been already gathered, immaterial whether the things which the Court cannot specifically enforce are to be done by the plaintiff or by the defendant. So where the defendant agreed to grant a lease of a coal mine to the plaintiff, and the plaintiff agreed to employ the defendant as manager, specific performance of the part relative to the lease was refused.³

Where
execution of deed not ordered.

§ 835. Where the contract stipulates for future acts, but is silent as to any deed to be executed to secure their performance, the Court, as we have seen, will not consider the execution of such a deed any performance of the stipulation. Other cases have arisen, where the contract contemplates some deed or obligation. Where there was a contract to execute works of such a nature that the Court could not superintend their performance, and in the contract was a stipulation that the contractors should give a bond to secure the performance of the contract: the Court, refusing to decree performance of the works, refused also to decree the execution of the bond, as that would have been a piecemeal performance of the contract, and the stipulations as to the works were the § 836. But where the contract is to do a thing, and to execute a deed for that purpose, and this deed covers, so to say, the whole of the contract, or the whole of so much of the contract as is incapable of immediate performance, the Court will, it seems, enforce the contract by the execution of the deed, though the acts to be done be future and to be done from time to time.² The real contract here which the Court enforces is a contract to execute the deed.

Where

§ 837. In Wilson v. The West Hartlepool Harbour and Railway Co.,³ the company agreed to sell to the plaintiff a plot of land near their line, and the contract contained terms as to the company laying down a branch railway, and as to the plaintiff using preferentially the defendants' line of railway. Lord Romilly M.R. granted specific performance, and his decree was affirmed by the judgment of Turner L.J., who held that the parties must have intended that the user of the railway which was necessarily prospective should be secured by covenant. Knight Bruce L.J. dissented. The view of Turner L.J. appears consonant to the ordinary course of business and in furtherance of justice.

§ 838. The cases on marriage contracts strongly illustrate the principle that the entire contract must be carried into effect. With regard to these, it has been urged that as the Court interferes in behalf of those who are purchasers, or considered as such by the Court, but declines to aid volunteers, so when the Court specifically executes a settlement, its interference should be confined to limitations in favour of purchasers, and not extended to volunteers. The Court however has applied the principle, that the whole or no part of the contract shall be executed, to marriage contracts as well as to other contracts. "There is no instance," said Lord Hardwicke,¹ "of decreeing a partial performance of articles,—the Court must decree all or none; and where some parts have appeared very unreasonable, the Courts have said we will not do that, and therefore, as we must decree all or none, the bill has been dismissed." In a case where a husband sued the heir of his wife, who was the settlor, on a covenant to settle lands, the specific performance was not restricted to his estate, but carried to a limitation to a niece of the wife, who was of course a collateral.²

tions.

§ 839. The cases of exception, or rather of apparent exception, to the principle in question, may now be considered.

i. Separate execution contemplated.

§ 840. (i.) It is hardly needful to repeat that the principle will not apply to contracts which, though they may be entire and single in themselves, contemplate a separate and piecemeal performance of separate parts. There, in the absence of other objection, the Court will carry into effect the intention of the parties.³

ii. Where
the contract is executed.

§ 841. (ii.) The principle in question is strictly applicable to executory contracts.⁴ It does not apply in terms to executed contracts. In *Rigby v. Great Western Railway Co.*⁵ the company had demised the Swindon refreshment rooms to the plaintiffs for 99 years: the lease contained various covenants, one of which the plaintiffs sought to enforce by injunction: an objection was made that the lease contained other covenants which the Court could not enforce: and peal, 5 Ph. 44.

Wigram V.C. made these observations:¹ “ I cannot go the length of the defendants’ proposition that the plaintiffs are not to be protected by injunction, only because there are other covenants to be performed by them which may be possibly broken hereafter. It would be more correct to say that where the mutual rights of the parties rest in covenant, each party is prima facie entitled to enforce his right in Equity or at Law, according to the nature of the covenant which may be broken. I cannot doubt but that this Court would, at the suit of a landlord, restrain a tenant for years, under a husbandry lease, from ploughing up ancient pasture, where he had bound himself by covenant not to do so ; and it would be no answer to such a bill for the tenant to say, that the landlord was under covenant to find him rough timber for repairs, which covenant might possibly be broken by the landlord before the expiration of the lease. That is a very different case from that of Gervais v. Edwards.² On the other hand, I am not prepared to go the length of the plaintiffs’ argument. It would not be difficult to suppose a case in which great injustice might be done by compelling a party specifically to perform a particular covenant.”

PART III.
Ch. xvi.

§ 842. A similar view was enunciated and acted upon by Lord Selborne in the case of Wolverhampton & Walsall Railway Co. v. London & North Western Railway Co.,³ where the plaintiffs sought an injunction on the ground of the stipulations contained in a contract between the companies sanctioned by Act of Parliament. It was argued that the contract contained terms, such as those providing for the proper development of local traffic, which the Court could not perform : but the argument was repelled by the Lord Chancellor, on the ground of the distinction between injunction as a right flowing from an executed contract and the specific performance of executory contracts.

Difference between executory and executed contracts illustrated from partnership articles.

§ 843. A familiar illustration of this difference between executory and executed contracts occurs in the case of partnership articles. The Court will not, generally speaking, enforce a contract to enter into a partnership whilst it remains executory:¹ but nevertheless, when the partnership has been constituted, the Court will by injunction enforce the performance of particular terms, though it may be incompetent to enforce all the terms:² this is the common course of practice in the Court.

And from leases.

§ 844. Another familiar illustration arises on leases. The Court will restrain the breach of a covenant in a lease, though it may contain other covenants which the Court could not possibly perform.

iii. Relief on contracts not by way of specific performance.

§ 845. (iii.) The principle in question is not to be extended to all cases of legal or even equitable relief on contracts, though the contracts may be executory. The fact that future acts may have to be done under a contract is no bar to relief grounded on a right perfect in itself, and resulting from past transactions also under the contract.

Instances.

§ 846. Thus, where in a contract for the execution of railway works the contractors, previously to their completion, filed a bill against the railway company, alleging fraud in the engineer in withholding certificates of work done, and asking amongst other things for an account of work done: it was held on demurrer, that though the works were not complete, and though the Court might not be able specifically to perform such a contract, the plaintiffs had a right, perfect in itself, of which they had been deprived by the alleged acts of the defendants, and that they were therefore entitled to some relief in Equity.¹ And so, it seems that if by a partnership contract it were stipulated that accounts should be made up half-yearly, and that one partner should have a salary proportionate to the profits to be so ascertained, he might from time to time institute actions to have the accounts so taken according to the contract, though its other terms might not be the subject of an action for specific performance.²

PART III.
Ch. xvi.

§ 847. To this principle we may probably refer the case of Lytton v. The Great Northern Railway Co.,³ where, there being a contract by the company to make and maintain a siding so long as it should be of convenience, the clause as to maintaining it was held no objection to a bill for the specific performance of the contract to make it, the question of repairs being a matter for inquiry when a breach of that part of the contract should occur.

*Lytton v.

§ 848. (iv.) In the next place, it must be observed that where the contract can be completely performed at the time, though there may be future acts dependent on it, the Court will be able to grant specific performance: as, e.g., a contract for the immediate sale of timber to be cut down at a future time, or at intervals, and the purchase-money for it to be paid by instalments.⁴ The cases already stated, where the Court will direct the execution of a covenant to do future acts, illustrate the same principle.⁵

iv. Contract may be completely performed, though there are future acts.

§ 849. (v.) It seems very questionable whether the principle that the Court will not perform part of a contract if it cannot perform all, ever applied to cases where the impossibility of carrying a part into execution was due to the default of the defendant who set up this defence. To permit it to prevail, would be counter to the maxim that no man shall take advantage of his own wrong. In the case of the defendant only possessing a part of the interest which he has stipulated to sell, the defect as to the other part is, as we have seen, no bar to specific performance at the suit of the purchaser.¹ In one case, there was a contract between three railway companies having reference to a purchase and an amalgamation: for the purchase no further parliamentary powers were needed, but for the amalgamation they were, and as regards one of the companies, they could not be obtained because a majority of its shareholders were adverse to the scheme: in a suit relating to the purchase the last-mentioned company set up as a defence the impossibility of carrying into effect the contract as to the amalgamation; but Lord Cottenham overruled the demurrer, and doubted whether the defendant company could say to the plaintiffs, that they should not have the benefit of such part of the contract as the defendants could perform, because they could not without an Act of Parliament perform the whole, and they declined applying to Parliament to give them the necessary powers.²

Lord
Cairns'
Act.

§ 850. But whatever difficulties may have previously existed on this point, seem to have been removed by Lord Cairns' Act (21 & 22 Vict. c. 27),³ and it may, it is conceived, be laid down, that wherever the thing which the Court cannot enforce is a condition inserted for the plaintiff's benefit in respect of which the defendant is in default, and where the Court would, before the passing of the Act, have had jurisdiction to enforce the contract on the plaintiff's waiver of the condition for his benefit, there the Court can now grant specific performance of the contract so far as it is enforceable specifically, and direct the defendant to pay damages (whether substantial or nominal)¹ for his non-performance of the condition which the Court cannot specifically enforce. Thus, in Soames v. Edge,² the plaintiff had agreed to grant a lease to the defendant so soon as he should have built a new house on the land: and the defendant agreed to accept the lease when required and to build the new house: the plaintiff filed his bill praying specific performance of the contract to build and take the lease, also for damages, either in addition to or substitution for such relief: on demurrer the defendant urged that the Court could not execute the contract to build, that the lease was dependent on the house being built, that the plaintiff had not waived the condition, and consequently that Lord Cairns' Act did not apply: this argument was repelled by Lord Hatherley (then a Vice Chancellor), who overruled the demurrer and held, that on the plaintiff's waiver of the condition he should have had jurisdiction before the Act, and that therefore since the Act he could give relief as to part by way of specific performance, and as to the rest by way of damages.

PART III.

Soames
v. Edge.

§ 851. The limits of this principle are well illustrated by a case of Norris v. Jackson,³ which shortly followed the case just referred to. In that case Cook, through whom the defendant claimed, in 1850 agreed with the plaintiff to grant him a lease of a certain house and farm, and on or before the 11th October, 1852, to put the house into sufficient repair and to erect suitable coach-houses, &c. as Norris and Cook should jointly agree upon, to the intent that the house and premises should be made fit for the occupation of Norris and his family: and Norris agreed that upon due performance by Cook of the foregoing stipulations he would accept the lease. These repairs were never done: but there was no allegation in the bill that Cook had evaded giving his consent to any arrangements: and the plaintiff did not waive but insisted on his right to have such repairs done, as the Court should think proper to fit the house for the occupation of himself and his family. The Court held that this was beyond its powers: that there was no contract which could be performed with respect to repairs, nor any contract binding the plaintiff to take a lease till the repairs had been done. The bill was consequently dismissed on demurrer.

vi. Where the contract has negative and positive stipulations.

§ 852. (vi.) It was formerly laid down that where the positive part of an executory contract could not be performed by the Court, it would not enforce the negative by injunction: so that, for example, where an actor had agreed to act at a certain theatre, that being a contract which the Court could not enforce, it refused to restrain him by injunction from acting elsewhere:¹ and where there was a contract for hiring and exclusive service during seven years, and for partnership at the end of that time on such terms as should be mutually agreed on; the contract being one which the Court could not perform as a whole, it refused to enforce by injunction the covenant for exclusive service.² Again, where the defendants had agreed to furnish the plaintiffs with the drawings for maps which the plaintiffs were exclusively to sell; the Court, being unable to compel the defendants to furnish these drawings, refused an injunction to restrain the defendants from themselves selling the maps.³

Lumley v. Wagner.

§ 853. This question was very much discussed in the case of Lumley v. Wagner,¹ where, there being an executory contract in part positive and in part negative, and the positive part being such as the Court was unable to enforce specifically, it yet interfered in respect of the negative part by means of injunction. In that case, the defendant entered into a contract with the plaintiff to sing at his theatre, and not to sing at any other; and Lord St. Leonards granted an injunction restraining the defendant from singing at any other theatre than the plaintiff's, though the specific performance of the positive part would have been certainly beyond the Court's power. The principle was acted on in some earlier cases,² and at least in one later one;³ in the case just cited all the then existing authorities on the subject were quoted.

² Kimberley v. Jennings, 6 Sim. 340.

³ Baldwin v. Society for Diffusing Useful Knowledge, 9 Sim. 393; Clarke v. Price, 2 J. Wils. 157.

PART III.
Ch. xvi.

§ 854. It has been thought to follow from the language of some parts of the judgment in *Lumley v. Wagner*⁴ that the principle of that case is not confined to cases where the negative stipulation is express, but applies also to others where the negation is implied. Accordingly, in one case where an actor had entered into a contract to perform on certain nights at Sadler's Wells Theatre, but without any stipulation that he would not perform elsewhere, Lord Hatherley (then Wood V.C.) restrained him from acting at any other place than the plaintiff's theatre on the nights on which he had agreed to act there.⁵ In *Fechter v. Montgomery*⁶

Lord Romilly M.R., though refusing an injunction on other grounds, does not seem to have doubted the jurisdiction in a like case: and in *Montague v. Flockton*¹ Malins V.C. granted an injunction on a similar contract by an actor after a full discussion and consideration of the authorities. This case is, at least, of doubtful authority.²

Negative
implied in charter-party.

§ 855. Another class of cases in which the Courts have implied a negative are suits on charter-parties. *De Mattos v. Gibson*³ was the first case where this question arose. There the defendant Curry being about to purchase a ship contracted by charter-party with the plaintiff to carry for him a cargo of coals from Newcastle to Suez. Curry then bought the ship and mortgaged it to Gibson with notice of the charter-party. The bill was filed to restrain Gibson from interfering with the voyage contracted for: Curry was afterwards added as a defendant and the plaintiff moved for an injunction before Lord Hatherley (then Wood V.C.), who refused the motion on the ground that the case was not within the principle of Lumley v. Wagner,⁴ and that the whole matter sounded in damages. The Lords Justices on appeal granted an injunction, Knight Bruce L.J. holding it to be the duty and within the power of the Court to prevent the commission or continuance of the breach of such a contract, when, its subject being valuable, as for instance a trading ship or some costly machine, the original owner and possessor, or a person claiming under him with notice, having the physical control of the chattel, is diverting it from the agreed object, that object being of importance to the others. Turner L.J. put his judgment upon the fitness of retaining matters as they were until at the hearing the important questions in the suit should be decided. The cause then came before Lord Hatherley (then Wood V.C.) at the hearing, who, after a full argument, dismissed the bill: and his decision was brought by appeal before Lord Chelmsford, who held that a vessel under charter “ought to be regarded as a chattel of peculiar value to the charterer, and that although a Court of Equity cannot compel a specific performance of the contract which it contains, yet that it will restrain the employment of the vessel in a different manner, whether such employment is expressly or impliedly forbidden, according to the principle so fully expressed in the case of Lumley v. Wagner.” But he affirmed the dismissal of the bill on the ground that neither of the defendants had done anything actively to hinder the voyage.

PART III.
Ch. xvi.

§ 856. The case of Sevin v. Deslandes,¹ before Lord Romilly M.R., followed De Mattos v. Gibson,² and there an injunction was granted, both on interlocutory motion and at the hearing, to restrain the defendant from doing any act inconsistent with the charter-party, which did not contain any express negative clauses.

Sevin v.
Deslandes.

§ 857. It is not easy to see the limits to which the doctrine of an implied negative might be carried: for as A. and not-A. include the whole world, it follows that a contract to sell to A. or to sing at A. must imply a negation of a sale to not-A. or a singing at not-A.: and if injunction is to be granted where specific performance might be impossible, the logical conclusion of the doctrine would be a great and rather formidable enlargement of the jurisdiction of Equity. Such an enlargement of the doctrine would be contrary to a dictum of Lord Cottenham, couched in the form of a question in Heathcote v. The North Staffordshire Railway Co.,¹ where he asked, "If A. contract with B. to deliver goods at a certain time and place, will Equity interfere to prevent A. from doing anything which may or can prevent him from so delivering the goods?"

Lord Hather-ley's view.

§ 858. In De Mattos v. Gibson, Lord Hatherley (then V.C.) thought that the implication of a negative stipulation was to be confined to cases in which "the breach of a positive agreement involves specific damage beyond that of the mere non-performance of the agreement itself"—the special damage (in Miss Wagner's case) resulting from her singing elsewhere at a rival theatre, ultra the non-performance of her contract to sing at the plaintiff's theatre: and in another case, the same learned Judge observed that the instances in which the Court had found it possible to infer the negation were very few and special.²

Jessel
M.R. in Fothergill
v. Rowland.

§ 859. In *Fothergill v. Rowland*³ Jessel M.R. had before him a bill, based on a contract for the sale of all the coal from a particular colliery for a certain period, which prayed for an injunction against selling the colliery, except subject to the contract, and against disposing of the coal except for the purpose of the performance of the contract. His Lordship observed that he could not find or seize any distinct line dividing the two classes of cases, that is, the class in which the Court not being able to grant specific performance grants an injunction, and the class in which it does not grant the injunction: and he therefore, following the dictum of Lord Cottenham, allowed a demurrer.

been criticised by Lord Selborne : and after his observations it is doubtful whether the mere presence of a negative stipulation can be relied on, if the contract is not such in its nature as to be the proper subject of equitable jurisdiction. “It was sought in that case,” said his Lordship,¹ “to enlarge the jurisdiction on a highly artificial and technical ground, and to extend it to an ordinary case of hiring and service, which is not properly a case of specific performance : the technical distinction being made, that if you find the word ‘not’ in an agreement—‘I will not do a thing’—as well as the words ‘I will,’ even although the negative term might have been implied from the positive, yet the Court, refusing to act on an implication of the negative, will act on the expression of it. I can only say, that I should think it was the safer and the better rule, if it should eventually be adopted by this Court, to look in all such cases to the substance and not to the form. If the substance of the agreement is such that it would be violated by doing the thing sought to be prevented, then the question will arise, whether this is the Court to come to for a remedy. If it is, I cannot think that ought to depend on the use of a negative rather than an affirmative form of expression. If, on the other hand, the substance of the thing is such, that the remedy ought to be sought elsewhere, then I do not think that the forum ought to be changed by the use of a negative rather than an affirmative.”

*Brett v.
East India
Co. Shipping Co.*

§ 861. The view thus plainly expressed by Lord Selborne had been indicated in an earlier case before Lord Hatherley, when Vice Chancellor. The object of the bill in that case was to enforce the specific performance of a contract to employ the plaintiff as broker, which contained a stipulation that the plaintiff's name should appear in all advertisements of the company. To it the defendants demurred, and the only point on which the Judge entertained any serious question was whether the stipulation as to advertisements did not bring the case within the principle of Lumley v. Wagner:¹ but he determined that it did not, and that, as the defendants did not employ the plaintiff as broker, the Court could not restrain their issue of advertisements omitting his name.² In a very recent case Lindley L.J. said he looked upon the case of Lumley v. Wagner "as an anomaly which it would be dangerous to extend."³

PART III.

Conclusions from the authorities.

§ 862. The position of that branch of the law on which Lumley v. Wagner is the leading authority can hardly be said to be very satisfactory. It may, it is conceived, be concluded that the principle of this case will not be extended: that negative stipulations will not be implied except in the cases where the Courts have already done so: and that even the presence of an express negative stipulation will not be found a sufficient ground for jurisdiction unless the contract is of a kind of which specific performance can be granted. In other words, it is probable that the Court will hereafter, except so far as it may be bound by existing authorities, consider whether the contract in respect of which the injunction is sought is or is not of a kind fit for specific performance: that, if it be, the Court will tend to restrain acts inconsistent with it, whether there be negative words or not: that if it be not of a kind fit for specific performance, no injunction will be granted, even though negative words may be present.⁴

enforce, and the latter are wholly on the plaintiff's part, no difficulty arises; because, though the Court may be unable to enforce them directly, it does so indirectly, inasmuch as the moment the plaintiff fails in performing his part of the contract, the injunction would be dissolved.¹

PART III.
Ch. xvi.

§ 864. (vii.) Where an arrangement come to between two persons is intended to be of a complex character, partly legal and partly honorary, the Court will, if there be no other impediment, specifically perform the legal contract, leaving the honorary part of the arrangement to rest, as was intended, on the honour of the parties. So that, where this latter part is malum prohibitum and not malum in se, it will not obstruct the Court in its execution of the other part of the arrangement which amounted to contract.²

vii. Where the arrangement is partly honorary.

§ 865. (viii.) Where the contract is in any manner alternative, so that the parts of it are mutually exclusive one of the other, and the plaintiff has a right to ask for the performance of one part, the Court may treat this as independent of the other: thus, in a contract to grant a lease with an option to the lessee to purchase, this option was held so far independent of the contract for a lease, that a default on the part of the plaintiff in insuring, which would have prevented his suing for a lease, did not prevent his suing on the option to purchase.³

viii. Where the contract is alternative.

§ 866. (ix.) In one case Lord Romilly M.R. appears to have expressed the opinion, that where a part of the contract which the Court could not perform has been actually performed before suit, the incapacity of the Court as to this part would furnish no defence as to the other part. But the doctrine appears to have been rejected by the Court of Appeal.⁴

CHAPTER XVII.

OF DEFECT IN THE SUBJECT-MATTER OF THE CONTRACT.

PART III.
Ch. xvii.

Nature
of the defence.

§ 867. ANOTHER ground on which the specific performance of a contract may be resisted is the existence of some essential defect in the subject-matter of it, or some variation from the description contained in the contract. This is, of course not a question of title; the acceptance of the title will not prevent the defendant from setting up the defence that the title relates to a different subject-matter from that which he contracted for.¹ The cases in which this variation arises between the thing and some representation made in respect of it are considered under the head of Misrepresentation;² the cases in which no such representation has been made it is now proposed briefly to consider.

Defects
patent or latent.

§ 868. The material distinction to be considered is between defects which are patent and visible to every one and those which are latent; for just as at Common Law a warranty, however general, is not taken to include defects apparent at the time of the bargain, as no one could have been deceived by them; so, whilst latent defects are a ground for refusing specific performance, patent defects are not.³

Patent
defects.

§ 869. Accordingly where a man bought a meadow with a road round it and a way across it which were not noticed in the description, Lord Rosslyn nevertheless enforced specific performance with costs:¹ and the circumstance that an estate described as inclosed in a ring-fence was not so, was held by Grant M.R. no defence to a suit for performance.²

PART III.
Ch. xvii.

§ 870. But where the objection taken by the purchaser, who was defendant, was the existence of certain water easements, and it was proved that the defendant had long lived in the neighbourhood, was well acquainted with the property, had in passing the road constantly seen some of the wells on the lower land supplied from the upper land, which was the subject of the contract, and had on the morning of the sale been upon the land; Knight Bruce V.C. expressed his opinion, but without giving the reasons, that no such degree of knowledge or notice had been proved as to preclude the purchaser from taking the objection.³ In this case, it may be observed, the objection to the upper lands was the existence of certain rights granted with the lower lands to enter the upper lands, fetch water from a spring, and to cut and cleanse gutters for the conveyance of the water to the lower lands and similar easements. Now the wells, gutters, and all the other objects of sense might probably have existed without necessarily involving these easements; and if so, it follows that the defect was in its nature latent and not really patent.

*Shackleton
v. Sutcliffe.*

§ 871. With regard to the latency of defects, it is to be observed that the Court will not demand a minute examination on the part of the purchaser, even where the vendor does not make any representation:⁴ to render a defect patent it must, it seems, be an obvious and unmistakeable object of sense.

Latent
defects.

² Dyer v. Hargrave, 10 Ves. 505.

PART III.
Ch. xvii.Defect consisting in undisclosed liability.

§ 872. The defect need not be in the actual physical subject-matter of the contract, it may consist in the existence of some liability of which the other party is ignorant: so a vendor of a lease described as subject to the usual covenants cannot, of course, enforce specific performance where the lease is subject to unusual ones.¹ Again, the vendor of a lease who has been silent as to the existence of onerous and unusual covenants cannot force on a purchaser a lease containing such covenants, unless he give the purchaser before contract a fair opportunity of ascertaining for himself the terms of such covenant:² and so where the vendor of leasehold property had before the sale received from his landlord a notice of re-entry in default of the premises' being repaired, and did not communicate the existence of this notice to the purchaser, who however knew of the state of the premises, the contract was held void at the suit of the purchaser, who had been ejected;³ and at Common Law the undisclosed fact that the property in question is liable to be taken under the powers of an Act of Parliament has been held a valid ground for rescinding the contract.⁴

Defect unknown to both parties.

§ 873. The existence of a defect, unknown at the time of the contract both to the vendor and the purchaser, will not, it seems, be a bar to the enforcement of the contract,⁵ unless, probably, where the defect is such as lies properly in the knowledge of the vendor.

¹ Hampshire v. Wickens, 7 Ch. D. 555 (where the subject of what are usual covenants is fully considered, as regards leaseholds); cf. Tildesley v. Clarkson, 30 Beav. 419; Re Higgins and Hitchman, 21 Ch. D. 95.

this section, Edwards Wood v. Marjoribanks (1 Giff. 384; 3 De G. & J. 329; 7 H. L. C. 806), where the purchaser of an advowson was held not entitled to any compensation in respect of a charge on the living under a grant from Queen Anne's Bounty.

⁵ Per Wigram V.C. in Lucas v. James, 8 Ha. 418. See also Parkinson v. Lee, 2 East, 314.

§ 874. Where the variation between the thing and the description of it seems rather in the nature of an excess than of a defect, and so in favour of the purchaser, the vendor is nevertheless disabled from enforcing the contract on an unwilling purchaser. Thus freehold land cannot be forced on a purchaser who bought it as copyhold. "It is unnecessary," said Lord Romilly M.R., "for a man who has contracted to purchase one thing to explain why he refuses to accept another."¹

PART III.
Ch. xvii.

Variation which is not a defect.

§ 875. Where an uncertainty exists as to the subject-matter of the contract, but the description by which it was sold is equally uncertain, there is of course no variation or defect. Therefore where property was sold by a general description as being part freehold and part leasehold, and the exact boundary between the freehold and leasehold parts of the estate could not be ascertained, this circumstance furnished no defence to a suit for specific performance.²

Uncertainty in subject-matter,
and in description
of it.

§ 876. A purchaser may of course contract for the purchase of a thing with all faults, and he then takes on himself the knowledge of the title and of the qualities of the subject. The cases on the effect of this clause in a contract seem to show,—first, that such a contract is binding, however many may be the defects in the subject, and whether they be latent or patent, and whether discoverable by the purchaser or not;³ secondly, that it will not protect the vendor where he takes positive means to conceal the defects,¹ as where a vessel was moved off her ways, where she lay dry, into the water in order to conceal her worm-eaten bottom and broken keel;² and thirdly, that it will not protect the vendor when he makes a misrepresentation, and that misrepresentation is embodied in the contract,³ or is both false and fraudulent.⁴ The Court refuses to direct any inquiry as to title where the sale is with all faults, and the vendor only sells such interest as he has.⁵

tract of a defect.

§ 877. The effect on the specific performance of the contract of a defect in the thing sold, or a variation from the description, is twofold, according to its magnitude. If, in the view of the Court, it be unessential, the contract may yet be performed, but with compensation; if it be essential, it confers on the party injured the right of rescinding the contract and defeating its performance.⁶ The distinction between these two classes of cases will be considered in the chapter on Compensation.⁷

CHAPTER XVIII.

OF THE WANT OF A GOOD TITLE.

§ 878. WHERE the vendor of land sues the purchaser for a specific performance of the contract, the defendant is entitled to have the action dismissed, if it appear that the plaintiff cannot make out a good title to the land. The defendant may have the action thus dismissed at the trial, provided the defect in title has been prominently put forward in the pleadings, and the Court can then decide the question,¹ or even where the objection appears on the evidence at the trial, and is a different objection from that on which the defendant had relied.² But the question more usually arises after the reference of title has been made. And the title which the vendor must show must be a title in himself, or in those whom he has a legal or equitable right to require to join in the conveyance: he has no right to say that some other person is willing to enter into a contract, and to force the title of that other person on the purchaser.³

Title must from doubt.

§ 879. The old practice of the Court of Chancery, in all cases of dispute as to the title of the estate sold, was to decide either for or against the validity of the title, and either to compel the purchaser to take it as good, or to dismiss the bill on the score of its being bad.⁴ But the case of *Marlow v. M.R., followed by Shapland v. Smith,¹ before Lord Thurlow, established the practice of allowing a class of titles which, without affirming them to be bad, the Court considered so doubtful as that it would not compel a purchaser to take them.²

Observations on the rule.

§ 880. Lord Eldon, though feeling himself bound to adhere to this as an established rule, on more than one occasion expressed his dissent from it on principle, and bewailed the great mischiefs which had resulted from it.³ But such expressions of opinion did not shake the rule: and it has been recognized by the House of Lords as one of the established rules of a Court of Equity.⁴

Arguments against and for the rule.

§ 881. Against the rule it has been urged that it is logically absurd, as well as practically injurious; for every title is good or bad, and if so, the Court ought to know nothing of a doubtful title. For the rule it has been urged in effect that, having regard to the nature of an action for specific performance, the rule in question is necessary in point of practical justice, and correct in reasoning. It must be remembered that the judgment of the Court in such an action is in personam and not in rem; that it binds only those who are parties to the action, and those claiming through them, and in no way decides the question in issue as against the rest of the world;⁵ and that doubts on the title of an estate are often questions liable to be discussed between the owner of the estate and some third person not before the Court, and therefore not bound by its decision.¹ If therefore there be any reasonable chance that some third person may raise a question against the owner of the estate after the completion of the contract, the Court may consider this to be a circumstance which renders the bargain a hard one for the purchaser, and one which in the exercise of its discretion it will not compel him to execute. Though every title must in itself be either good or bad, there must be many titles which the Court cannot pronounce with certainty to belong to either of these categories in the absence of the parties interested in supporting both alternatives, and without having heard the evidence they might have to produce, and the arguments they might be able to urge: and it is in the absence of these parties that the question is generally agitated in proceedings for specific performance. The Court, when fully informed, must know whether a title be good or bad; when partially informed, it often may and ought to doubt.

§ 882. It is by no means easy to express what ^{Amount of doubt.} amount of doubt upon a point there must be, to induce the Court to refuse specific performance: and this difficulty has been increased by the ebb and flow of judicial opinion and decision for and against the rule, which has characterized the cases of the last quarter of a century. One mode of measuring the doubt has been by applying the question, whether it is such a title as that the Judge himself would lend his own money upon it. The Court "has almost gone the length," said Lord Eldon, "of saying that unless it is so confident that if it had £95,000 to lay out on such an occasion, it would not hesitate to trust its own money on the title, it would not compel a purchaser to take it."² able title.

§ 883. In another case, Lord Eldon put the question for the Court as being, “whether the doubt is so reasonable and fair, that the property is left in his (the purchaser’s) hands not marketable:”¹ but a marketable title being “one which, so far as its antecedents are concerned, may at all times and under all circumstances be forced on an unwilling purchaser,”² the observation seems not much to assist us in measuring how great the doubt must be.

Formerly

§ 884. It was formerly held that, though the Court might entertain an opinion in favour of the title, yet if it were satisfied that that opinion might fairly and reasonably be questioned by other competent persons, it would refuse specific performance. Thus, in a case before Leach V.C., he expressed the strong inclination of his opinion to be in favour of the title, and yet refused the relief sought by the plaintiff;³ and in the case of Pyrke v. Waddingham,⁴ in which Turner V.C. discussed the subject now before us, he expressed an opinion in favour of the title, but nevertheless dismissed the vendor’s bill with costs. For this reason it was held that the Court would not force a title on a purchaser in opposition to the decision of another Court, though it might think that decision to be wrong.⁵ Accordingly the Court of Appeal in Chancery in one case dismissed an appeal, though thinking the title good, on the ground of the opinion of the Judge below:⁶ though the same measure of deference was not extended to the opinion of a conveyancing counsel of the Court.⁷

Court.

§ 886. On the one hand, the very same title which Turner V.C. refused to force on a purchaser in Pyrke v. Waddingham, was forced on another purchaser by Lord Romilly M.R., not on the ground that the principles laid down in that case were erroneous, but that they did not justify the decision.¹

§ 887. Again, as regards the decision of an inferior Court;—the Judges of the Court of Appeal have held that they are in no wise bound by such decisions, and that where they consider that there is no reasonable doubt, the adverse decision of the inferior Court will not be a sufficient reason to refuse the plaintiff relief.²

Decision of inferior Court.

“With respect to the common cases of doubtful title,” said Lord St. Leonards, “I cannot agree with the proposition, that an unfavourable decision in the Court of inferior jurisdiction renders the title doubtful. The Judge of the superior Court would still be bound to exercise his own discretion and decide according to his own judgment.”³ This language has been cited with approval by the Court of Appeal in Chancery in England.⁴

Leonards’

§ 888. On the other hand, the case of Pyrke v. Waddingham has received the sanction of the Earl of Selborne and Baggallay and Lush L.JJ., in a case in which they adopted the principles laid down in that case, and refused to force a purchaser to take a title in respect of which there were serious grounds for doubt.¹

§ 889. The doubt which may prevent the Court from compelling the purchaser to accept a title may be a doubt either of law or of fact; and, as to law, it may be connected with the general law of the realm,² or with the construction of particular instruments;³ and, as to fact, it may be in reference to facts appearing on the title, or to facts extrinsic to it.⁴ Again, it may be about a matter of fact which admits of proof, but has not been satisfactorily proved,⁵ or about such a matter as from its nature admits of no satisfactory proof, as the negative proposition that there was no creditor of the vendor capable of taking advantage of an act of bankruptcy.⁶

Cases in which Court would consider title doubtful.

§ 890. It is not easy to give any perfect classification of the doubts which would and of those which would not prevail with the Court, but the following attempt may not be useless. The Court would, it is conceived, consider the title doubtful in the following cases:—

i. Probability of litigation great.

(i.) Where the probability of litigation ensuing against the purchaser in respect of the matter in doubt is considerable, or, as it was put by Alderson B.,⁷ where there is “a reasonable decent probability of litigation.” The Court, to use a favourite expression, will not compel the purchaser to buy a lawsuit.⁸ The unwillingness of the Court is increased where the title depends on a question of fact to be proved by oral testimony of witnesses whom, at the time when the controversy is raised, it may be difficult to find, or who may be dead, or out of the jurisdiction.

Ch. xviii.

(ii.) Where there has been a decision by a Court of co-ordinate jurisdiction adverse to the title or to the principle on which the title rests, though the Court thinks that decision wrong.¹

ii. Past adverse decision doubted.

(iii.) Where there has been a decision in favour of the title which the Court thinks wrong.²

iii. Past favourable decision doubted.

(iv.) Where the title depends on the construction and legal operation of some ill-expressed and inartificial instrument, and the Court holds the conclusion it arrives at to be open to reasonable doubt in some other Court.³

iv. Construction of in-artificial instrument.

(v.) Where the title rests on a presumption of fact of such a kind that if the question of fact were before a jury, it would be the duty of the Judge not to give a clear direction in favour of the fact, but to leave the jury to draw their own conclusion from the evidence.

v. Title resting on presumption of doubtful fact.

To this principle we may probably refer many of those cases where a doubt as to a fact has prevailed; as where the title depended upon proof that there was no creditor who could take advantage of an act of bankruptcy committed by the vendor:⁴ or where the title depended upon the absence of notice of an incumbrance, of which absence the vendor produced some evidence,⁵ or upon the presumption arising from mere possession.⁶

And it may be noticed that the Court will not allow a voluntary settlor to force on an unwilling⁷ purchaser a title depending on the invalidity of the settlement.⁸

“One difficulty in the way of assisting him,” said Lord Eldon, “is, that he has no equity to defeat the act which he has done himself: but another consideration which has weighed in such cases is, that if you compel a purchaser to take an estate at the instance of such a man, you cannot be quite sure that there may not have been some intermediate acts, which by matter ex post facto may have made the settlement good which in its origin was not good.”¹

vi. Presumption

fatal to title.

small.

(i.) Where the probability of litigation ensuing against the purchaser in respect of the doubt is not great, the Court, to use Lord Hardwicke’s language in one case, “must govern itself by a moral certainty, for it is impossible in the nature of things, there should be a mathematical certainty of a good title.”³ Accordingly, in the case before Lord Hardwicke, his Lordship enforced specific performance, although there was a reservation of mines, because the Court was satisfied that there was no subject-matter for the reservation to act upon, or that all legal right to exercise it had ceased.⁴ And in another

(ii.) Where there has been a decision adverse to the title by an inferior Court, which decision the superior Court holds to be clearly wrong.²

ii. Past adverse decision wrong.

(iii.) Where the question depends on the general law of the land. "As a general and almost universal rule, the Court is bound as much between vendor and purchaser, as in every other case, to ascertain and so determine as it best may what the law is, and to take that to be the law which it has so ascertained and determined."³

iii. Question dependent on general law.

(v.) Where the title depends on a presumption, provided it be such, that if the question were before a jury, it would be the duty of the Judge to give a clear direction in favour of the fact, and not to leave the evidence generally to the consideration of the jury.⁵ So where the recital of deeds raised the presumption that they contained nothing adverse to the title, the mere loss of the deed, where the title was fortified by sixty years' undisputed posses-

vi. Suspicion of mala fides.

(vi.) Where the doubt raised rests not on proof or presumption, but on a suspicion of mala fides. This point has given rise to some diversity of opinion. In *Hartley v. Smith*⁵ the title depended on a deed of grant of chattels, containing a stipulation for the grantor's continuing conditionally in possession; and Leach V.C., without deciding whether such a deed was in itself fraudulent and an act of bankruptcy, declined to force the title on the purchaser, on the ground that its validity depended on its being made upon good consideration and bonâ fide, and that these were circumstances, the existence of which the purchaser had no adequate means of ascertaining. "My opinion therefore is," said the Vice-Chancellor, "that a Court of Equity ought not to compel this purchaser to accept this title; because assuming the deed not to be fraudulent ex facie, it still may be

§ 892. This dictum seems to allow no room to the presumption of bona fides, and to make the possibility of fraud in extrinsic facts a sufficient objection to the title: accordingly, it has not been accepted in all its generality. It “must not,” said Alderson B. of this dictum, “be pushed to the farthest extent which the words will possibly bear:”² and accordingly, that Judge held good a title under a deed which extrinsic evidence might have shown to be invalid, as comprising all the property of the grantor, or as made to give a fraudulent preference to some creditors over others, or as made in contemplation of bankruptcy, because there was no ground apparent for making any of these objections to it.³

§ 895. Again, a purchaser is not entitled in the absence of circumstances of suspicion to refuse a title made under a will, because the will has not been proved against the heir or he does not join:³ so that where, during a litigation of thirteen years, no question had been raised impeaching the validity of the will, and a person who had claimed under another will had withdrawn from all contention against the one first mentioned, Lord Hatherley (then Wood V.C.) compelled the purchaser to take a title under the will.⁴

§ 900. It will be necessary to inquire under what circumstances events which either determine the existence of the subject-matter of the contract or essentially affect it will furnish a defence in specific performance. v. Giddings.*

§ 902. In one case, the contract was for the sale of an estate in fee in remainder on an estate tail: a conveyance had been executed and a bond given for payment of the purchase-money, when it was discovered, for the first time, that at the time of the sale no such remainder existed, the tenant in tail having previously suffered a recovery: the Court rescinded the contract, and ordered the bond to be delivered up and repayment to be made of all interest which had been paid on it.²

§ 903. In another case, where, in order to preserve the timber on an entailed estate from being cut down by the assignee in the insolvency of a tenant for life, the owner of the next life-estate and the tenant in tail contracted with the assignee that he should be deemed to be entitled to the timber as if it had been cut down and carried away by him on a specified day prior to the contract, but should not actually cut it before another specified day; and at the time when this contract was made, the insolvent was dead, but no party to the contract was aware of that fact: the Court of Appeal declined, on the grounds of mistake and absence of consideration, to enforce the contract.¹

Emmerson's case.

§ 905. A contract relating to a chattel implies, at Common Law, the existence of the chattel and its existence in the form or of the description specified in the contract, and consequently an event destroying the chattel before the contract is concluded puts an end to it. Therefore, where a contract for the sale of a life annuity was concluded in England on the 28th of February, and the annuitant died in New South Wales on the 6th of the same month, there was held to be no contract:³ and where a floating cargo was sold, and it subsequently appeared that at the time of the sale the captain had sold the cargo abroad, in consequence of the damage it had sustained at sea, the Exchequer Chamber and the House of Lords held the contract to be incapable of being enforced.¹ But no warranty being implied at Common Law as to condition, the sale of a ship at sea, which at the time happened to have been stranded, was held binding, for the subject of the contract still continued a ship.² The impossibility of performing a contract of which the subject-matter is extinct would of course prevent the interference of a Court of Equity in these cases, if on other grounds it could give relief.³

The question excluded by contract.

§ 906. But a person may so contract as to preclude himself from raising any question as to the existence or determination of the subject-matter at the time of the contract.⁴

When is the contract complete?

§ 907. The question of the time at which the contract became complete frequently arose in cases of sales by the Court of Chancery, because until the report had been confirmed absolute, or, according to the subsequent practice, until eight days after the certificate of the purchase had been signed by the Judge in Chambers, the biddings might be re-opened.⁵ In these cases, the question was whether the contract was to be treated as concluded by the sale before the Master or the Chief Clerk, subject only to being defeated by the opening of the biddings, in which case the confirmation related back to the day of sale, and that day divided events prior and events subsequent to the contract; or, on the other hand, whether the contract was to be considered concluded only when it became absolute and indefeasible by the confirmation. In the case of Vesey v. Elwood,⁶ Lord St. Leonards decided on the former of these views, that the sale transferred the property, subject only to the risk of its being opened. This was the view of Lord Eldon also, in Anson v. Towgood,¹ though it seems at variance with the previous cases² before him. The other view was supported by the statement of Lord Langdale M.R.:—"by the established rule of the Court, the purchaser is to be considered as the owner of the estate from the date of the order confirming the report;"³ but as the circumstance which in this case gave rise to the question was not only after the sale but after the confirmation also, the case is probably not of the same weight on the point now under discussion, as if the circumstance had been after sale but before confirmation.

PART III.
Ch. xix.

§ 908. But the former practice of opening biddings has now been discontinued by statute, and it has been enacted that the highest bonâ fide bidder at the sale, provided he shall have bid a sum equal to or higher than the reserved price (if any), shall be declared and allowed the purchaser, unless the Court or Judge shall, on the ground of fraud or improper conduct in the management of the sale, upon the application of a person interested in the land (such application to be made to the Court or Judge before the Chief Clerk's certificate of the result of the sale shall have become binding), either open the biddings, holding such bidder bound by his bidding, or discharge him from being the purchaser.⁴ Under this enactment it seems clear that the purchase is complete when the sale at or above the reserve price, if any, has taken place.⁵

§ 910. Where from the nature of the contract it appears that the contracting parties contemplated its fulfilment only in the event of the continued existence of some subject-matter or thing, the contract is held to be subject to an implied condition that it shall cease with the subject-matter or thing; and if, before performance, the thing cease to exist, the contract goes with it.¹

for sale of land.

§ 911. In the case of contracts for the sale of land, it has been laid down with regard to events happening after their being signed, that the question on whom the advantage or loss resulting from them would fall, and whether, therefore, the Court would enforce specific performance without reference to them—or whether, on the other hand, they might determine the contract—is to be decided by whether or not the title had then been actually accepted.² But the more correct doctrine appears to be that the equitable estate passes on the signature of the contract if there be a good title, though that may not be shown till afterwards. “It is,” said Plumer V.C., “the established doctrine of Equity, that if a contract to purchase is to be completed at a given period, and the title is finally made out, the parties continuing in treaty, and the purchaser not by any acts released from his bargain, the estate is considered as belonging to the purchaser from the date of the contract, and the money from that time as belonging to the vendor.”³

Ch. xix.A con-

§ 912. Where the contract is in its inception expressly conditional, the transfer of the equitable estate from the vendor to the purchaser takes place not on the conclusion of the contract, but on its becoming absolute by the performance of the condition, and until that event the property sold remains at the risk of the vendor. This is well illustrated by a case which was decided by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, on appeal from the Court of Chancery in Canada. A contract was entered into for a lease for five years, from the 1st of April, 1840, the landlord undertaking to erect by that time a new warehouse on part of the ground to be demised, and to put the old warehouse in repair, the amount of rent to be determined with reference to the amount expended on the buildings. The new building was not completed, nor the old warehouse repaired, on the 1st of April, but no objection was made by the intended lessees, who then continued to occupy part of the premises under a former contract. Shortly afterwards, the whole premises were destroyed by fire. The landlord brought a bill for specific performance of the contract, and for the defendants to rebuild the premises and accept a lease. It was held, in the first place, that if time were of the essence, it had been waived by the defendants, but that this did not waive the obligation on the lessor as to building, and that the defendants were not bound to accept a lease till that was performed; and, in the second place, that, treating the contract to take a lease as a contract to purchase, the warehouse was never purchased by the lessees until it was completed by the lessor; and, consequently, that until that was done it was not the property of the lessees, nor at their risk.¹

it was entered into, but subsequently and before judgment rendered illegal by statute, it seems to be clear on principle that no specific performance could be granted except where the Court could still execute the contract cy près.¹ a contract thus rendered illegal would in the contemplation of the Court have become impossible.²

§ 914. But when the contract has been completely made, the thing sold is at the risk of the purchaser, who must bear all subsequent losses, and is entitled to all subsequent gains:³ subsequent events, therefore, can neither determine the contract nor give either party a right to resist its performance.⁴

ciple formerly not clearly recognized.

§ 915. Formerly this principle does not appear to have been as clearly recognized as it is now: thus, where a great subsequent advantage accrued to one party, Lord Hardwicke seems to have doubted how far the Court would decree performance on the original terms of the contract.⁵ And where A. contracted to sell his estate for an annuity during his life, the time appointed for conveyance was the 31st of October, but the annuity was to commence from the 5th of April previous, and to be paid half-yearly: the half-year's payment, due on the 5th of October, was not paid or tendered, and on the 12th of November A. died from an accident: Lord Bathurst and the House of Lords dismissed a bill for specific performance.⁶ Lord St. Leonards⁷ attributes this decision to the neglect to make or tender the payment; but it does not seem clear that the case was not considered by the Judges who decided it as one of inadequate consideration, and treated as a case of hardship.

§ 916. The principle as now established is illustrated by numerous cases. Thus, where money was left to be laid out in land to be settled to the use of A. in tail, remainder to B. in fee, and A. and B. agreed to divide the money, and before the contract had been carried into execution A. died without issue, the contract was nevertheless specifically performed.¹ So a contract to sell for an annuity will not be avoided by the death of the annuitant, even before any payment.² So where, subsequently to the contract for the sale of a house, the house is burnt down, the loss falls on the purchaser:³ and in such an event the purchaser will not, in the absence of any provision in the contract, be entitled to the benefit of an existing insurance against fire effected by the vendor.⁴ And again, where a trader agreed to take two persons into partnership for a period of eighteen years, in consideration of a sum to be paid by instalments, and before they were all paid he became a bankrupt, the assignees were held entitled to the remaining instalments.⁵

Illustrations of the principle as now established.

§ 917. Another class of cases which have illustrated the same principle has arisen from the failure or winding-up of a company after a contract has been entered into for the purchase of shares in it but before the contract has been completed. Such an event furnishes no defence to an action for specific performance of the contract to buy the shares.¹

§ 918. Where a contract, capable of being specifically executed at the time of the issuing of the writ, has by lapse of time between that and the trial become incapable of execution in the ordinary way, so as to confer future benefits, the question arises, what course ought to be pursued. This question came before Plumer M.R. in Nesbitt v. Meyer,² where a bill was filed before the term expired for a specific performance of a contract to accept a lease, but, without fault on either side, the term expired before the hearing. The case was decided upon another point, but the Judge evidently inclined to the opinion, that the Court would not decree the execution of a formal lease after the expiration of the term. In accordance with this view, Lord Cranworth expressed the opinion that it would require very special circumstances indeed to induce the Court to decree specific performance of a lease after the expiration of the term.³ “What the Court,” said his Lordship,⁴ “really would be decreeing in such case would not be the specific performance of an agreement for a lease, but merely that the lessee should make himself a specialty debtor in respect of past benefits received.” It is, however, to be remarked, that the circumstances of the case before Plumer M.R. and before his Lordship were different, inasmuch as in the former the delay seems to have been entirely due to the Court; whereas in the latter no steps were taken until just before the expiration of the term, so that it was impossible for the plaintiff to obtain a decree until the term was at an end.¹

PART III.
Ch. xix.

§ 919. On the other hand, the opinion of Alderson B. was somewhat at variance with the doctrine above stated. “The moment the bill is filed,” said his Lordship,² “the rights of the parties remain fixed, or ought so to do. I cannot accede to the doctrine in Nesbitt v. Meyer.³ How can the constitution of the Court alter the rights of the parties?” The decision in the case in the Exchequer seems, however, reconcilable with those before stated; for the prayer of the bill was for the specific performance of a contract for a lease, and for an account of arrears of rent on the footing of the contract, and it was held that although by the expiration of the term before the hearing the specific performance could not be granted, yet that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for an account.

§ 920. And similarly, in a previous case, Leach V.C. held that a bill might be maintained by a purchaser for the specific performance of a contract for a life annuity, although the annuitant had died not only before the hearing, but before the bill was filed, where there were arrears of the annuity between the time of the purchase and the death of the annuitant, to which the purchaser had an equitable title under the contract: but his Honour said that it might be a question whether such a bill could be maintained if the death of the annuitant were to happen so that the purchaser

OF DEFAULT ON THE PART OF THE PLAINTIFF.

§ 922. WITH regard to the matters to be done by the plaintiff according to the terms of the contract, it is, from obvious principles of justice, incumbent on him, when he seeks the performance of the contract, to show, first, that he has performed, or been ready and willing to perform, the terms of the contract on his part to be then performed;¹ and secondly, that he is ready and willing to do all matters and things on his part thereafter to be done; and a default on his part in either of these respects furnishes a ground upon which the action may be resisted.² We will first consider cases of default in respect of terms of the contract which ought to have been already performed.

but that he need not show performance of (v.) Non-essential terms,

(vi.) The terms of a collateral contract, or

(vii.) Terms of which the defendant has prevented or waived the performance.

Lastly, it will be necessary to consider (viii.) Terms, the performance of which has become impossible without the plaintiff's fault or default.

i. Conditions precedent.

§ 924. (i.) As to conditions precedent, the plaintiff must of course show their performance, and he cannot obtain a decree for specific performance upon an undertaking that he will perform them.¹ As the non-performance of a condition precedent is only in some cases the default of the plaintiff, the subject of conditions is considered in a subsequent chapter.²

ii. Express
terms.

§ 925. (ii.) As to the express terms nothing more need now be said. The only important point will be considered when we come to the difference between essential and non-essential terms.

iii. Implied
terms.

§ 926. (iii.) The performance must extend to such of the implied terms as are essential. Thus where an intended lessor agreed to finish a house for an intended lessee, who was to do the repairs during the intended term, the Court held that in such a contract was implied an undertaking to deliver it in complete tenantable repair proper for houses of the character demised: and this undertaking not having been, in the judgment of the Court, performed, the intended lessor's bill for specific performance was dismissed with costs.³ The case might probably have been determined as one rather of construction than of the implication of terms, i.e., that to finish a house means to finish so that the house shall be in proper repair. PART III.

Ch. XX.

§ 927. (iv.) Performance must be shown of representations of future acts made at the time of the contract on the faith of which the contract was entered into. These representations¹ need not amount to a guarantee, nor in case of non-performance give a right to an action either for damages or for cancellation of the contract: but yet, if made and not performed, they are a defence to an action for specific performance.² iv. Representations of future acts.

§ 928. Thus where a vendor at a sale represented that he would make improvements in the access to the property sold, and failed to do so, the Court refused specifically to perform his contract;³ and the same was the decision of the Court in a case where the vendor by his agent represented that a church should be erected in the immediate neighbourhood of the building ground which was the subject of the contract, and that he would complete certain streets, and the purchase was made on the faith of these representations, which the plaintiff however never carried into effect.⁴ Instances.

§ 929. We may here briefly inquire into how far maps or plans of the property, exhibited by the vendor at the time of entering into the contract, form representations of the kind we are now considering.⁵ Plans.

§ 930. Where the parties have matured their agreement into a contract, and that contract is silent on the subject of such map or plan, the Court will Contract silent as to plan.

not from such exhibition infer a contract.¹ This applies alike to private contracts and to special Acts of Parliament, so that notices given, and plans and sections deposited, are not to be used in construing an Act afterwards, except so far as they are referred to, and thus incorporated in the Act of Parliament itself.² But where they are so referred to and incorporated, effect must be given to them according to the terms of the Act.³

Intended division by roads shown on plan.

§ 931. Where the map thus exhibited delineates the intended division of the property by new roads, the vendor may not afterwards divide the land in a manner so different as to attract a population entirely different from that which would have been produced by the execution of the plan proposed by the map.⁴

Exact performance
of scheme not obligatory.

§ 932. But though the exhibition of a map may bind to this extent, it will not oblige to an exact performance of the scheme it embodies. Thus where a plan was referred to in the contract, and used as a description of the part of the property in question, and on this plan the measurement and width of the street were marked, but there was nothing in the contract which distinctly pointed out that part of the plan as binding the parties, Lord Langdale M.R. held that it did not form part of the contract, so as to entitle one party to relief against an encroachment on the width of the street.⁵

§ 933. In another case the particulars referred generally to an accompanying plan, and on the plan several roads were marked out so as to provide front-ages for all the lots, and the lines of roads were marked out on the land itself in accordance with the plan: Knight Bruce V.C. held that, in the absence of any clause in the particulars or conditions of sale providing for any rights of way beyond a road leading into the nearest highway, such road was all that the purchaser was entitled to.¹

Randall v. Hall.

§ 934. Where the sale plan, instead of, as in the previous cases, representing an intended and future state of the property, accurately represents it in its actual and present state, it has been held that it will not carry the case higher than a view of the property. Therefore where a plan represented a well on lot 4 communicating with a reservoir on lot 2, and that communicating with the inn which was the lot 1 which the plaintiff purchased, and the vendor conveyed lots 2 and 4 without any reservation to the plaintiff of a right to a flow of water from the well, the plaintiff's demand for compensation for the loss of the water was refused.² Lord St. Leonards, however, considered this case open to observation.³

§ 935. (v.) In the averment of performance by the plaintiff, Equity, as already stated, discriminates between the essential and the non-essential terms of a contract; and to furnish the defendant with a ground for resisting the action, the non-performance of the plaintiff must be of a term important and considerable.⁴ The Court of Chancery frequently interfered at the instance of a party who might have been debarred from relief at Common Law, because unable to allege performance in the very terms of the contract, which is by the Common Law essential.¹ Thus, for example, where A. contracted to sell property to B., and by the same contract it was also stipulated that A. should continue tenant from year to year of the land, and it happened that from embarrassed circumstances he was unable to fill the tenancy, this was, from the determinable nature of the holding, held to be a matter of no consideration, and so not a bar to specific performance of the contract for sale.² And all the cases in which the Court grants a vendor asking for specific performance indulgence in the making out of his title, or allows him to enforce the contract with compensation, are, of course, illustrative of the principle now before us.

§ 936. In a case before the Privy Council, the judgment may at first sight appear to go so far as to assert that no default of performance on the part of the plaintiff short of that which goes to the whole consideration for the promise sued on, is available as a defence against specific performance.³ But probably such reading is incorrect, and the intention of their Lordships was to draw the distinction between essential and non-essential terms.

vi. Default in respect of collateral contract.

§ 937. (vi.) Where that, on the non-performance of which by the plaintiff the defendant relies, is in its nature a collateral and separate contract, or is part of or referable to such a contract, though between the same parties and entered into at the same time, and having relation to the same subject-matter as the contract which the plaintiff seeks to enforce, the Court will not consider the default by the plaintiff in respect of the one contract as any bar to the specific performance of the other, though such default may give the defendant a cross right of action on legal or equitable grounds.¹

PART III.
Ch. XX.

§ 938. Thus where A. contracted with B., the owner of a plot of land, to erect a villa on it, and to keep it insured in the joint names of A. and B. in the County Fire Office, and B. agreed as soon as the house should be completed, to grant a lease of the plot to A., and that if A. should not perform his part, the contract for the lease should be void; and the contract also stipulated that A. should have the option of purchasing the fee within two years; A. erected the villa, but insured in a wrong office, and in his own name alone, and then brought his bill for a sale under the option to purchase; and it was held by Lord Romilly M.R. that this option was independent of the right to a lease, and that notwithstanding the plaintiff's default in respect of the latter right, the former subsisted, and he accordingly decreed a specific performance.²

Instances.

§ 939. So, where in a deed for the dissolution of partnership, one partner assigned to another certain foreign shares, and covenanted for further assurance; and the other partner covenanted with the former for indemnity against certain liabilities: a further assurance of the shares became necessary, and on a bill filed to enforce specific performance of the covenant to that effect, it was held by Knight Bruce and Turner L.JJ., overruling Lord Romilly M.R., that a breach of the covenant to indemnify which the plaintiff had entered into with the defendant was no defence to the suit. The two covenants were independent, so that the performance of the one was not to be resisted by reason of the non-performance of the other.¹

vii. Performance waived by defendant.

§ 940. (vii.) A defendant who has waived the performance by the plaintiff of what was on his part to be performed cannot, of course, use the non-performance as a defence: but the burthen of proving this waiver of course rests on the plaintiff.²

Non-performance the fault of defendant.

§ 941. Still more clearly, if possible, is non-performance by the plaintiff excused when that has resulted from the neglect or default of the defendant.³ So where the purchaser prevents the vendor from completing his title, he will be compelled to forego an objection he may raise on the score of that incompleteness.⁴

Infancy.

§ 942. With regard to infancy, an infant heir cannot avail himself of his disability to excuse the non-assertion of his right under an executory contract made with his ancestor, when the immediate performance of his part of the contract is essential to the interest of the other party; as, for example, of a contract to lay out money in building within three years.⁵

viii. Impossibility of performance.

§ 943. (viii.) We shall now consider how far the impossibility of performing the plaintiff's part arising without any fault or default on his part furnishes an excuse for non-performance. In those cases in which all that was to have been performed by the plaintiff has become entirely incapable of being executed, the plaintiff cannot demand the performance by the other party, because his non-performance is a total failure of the consideration which was to have moved from him.

But where the impossibility refers not to the substantial, but only to the exact and literal performance of the contract, the Court will struggle with matters of form in order to do complete justice between the parties; but it will carefully avoid going so far as to make a new contract between them.¹ Hence arise the cases on Compensation.²

PART III.
Ch. XX.

§ 944. As to the cases in which the plaintiff has performed a substantial part of his contract, and then the remaining part has become impossible by reason of circumstances not dependent upon him and without his fault, a distinction has been drawn between those cases in which the plaintiff has not, by performing that part of the contract which he has performed, altered his position, and those cases in which he has so altered his position by his part performance; Equity refusing to enforce performance of the contract by the other party in the former case, and enforcing it in the latter.

Substantial part performed.

§ 945. This distinction rests almost entirely on the authority of Gilbert C.B. in a passage in his "Lex Prætoria,"³ but has been approved by subsequent writers,⁴ and seems worthy of attentive consideration. "Here," says his Lordship in the passage in question, "it is to be noted that the plaintiff that exhibited his bill upon the foot of performing the bargain on his part, ought to show that he has performed all that is to be done on his part, or is ready to do it; for where any part (which he should have performed) is become impossible to be performed at the time of exhibiting his bill, then he can have no specific execution, because he cannot specifically execute on his own part: as in the case of my Lord Feversham, which was on a marriage agreement, whereby he contracted to settle the manor of Holmly on his wife and the heirs of their bodies, and clear it of incumbrances, and settle a separate maintenance on his wife, and likewise sell some pensions in order to make a further provision for his wife and the issue of that marriage; and Sir George Sandys, the father-in-law, agreed to settle 3,000*l.* per annum on the Lord Feversham for life, remainder to the wife for life, and so to the issue of the marriage. Lord Feversham cleared the manor of Holmly, settled it accordingly, and settled the separate maintenance, but did not sell the pensions, nor settle the further provisions: the wife died without issue, and the Lord Feversham preferred his bill to have the 3,000*l.* per annum settled on him during his life: but decreed because Lord Feversham was in statu quo as to all that part of the agreement which he had performed, and having not performed the whole, and the other parts being now impossible, and no compensation being possible to be adjusted for it, he had no title in Equity to have performance of Sir George's part of the agreement, since such performance could not be mutual. But the issue of Lord Feversham might have been relieved, because in no default. Lord Feversham v. Watson, Rep. t. Finch, 445; 2 Freem. 35; Skin. 287."

To make the foregoing statement perfectly clear, it should be added that, in the settlement made by the plaintiff, the reversion expectant on the default of issue by his late wife was reserved to him in fee, so that the settlement had in the event operated nothing.¹

plaintiff shall have relief.

§ 946. "But if," continues the Lord Chief Baron, "a man has performed so much of his part of the agreement as he is not in statu quo, and is in no default for not performing the residue, then he shall have a specific execution from the other party of the agreement: as if a man has contracted for a portion with his wife, and has agreed to settle upon the wife and her issue, lands of such a value free from incumbrances, and he sells part of his land to disincumber, and is going on to disincumber and settle the rest: then if the wife dies without issue before the settlement be actually made, yet he shall have a portion, because he cannot be in statu quo, having sold part of his lands, and there is no default in him, since he was going on to disincumber and settle the rest; therefore the accident of the death of his wife doth not alter his right to his wife's portion. Meredith v. Wynne, Eq. Abr. 70, p. 15; Gilb. Eq. Rep. 70; Prec. Ch. 312; 2 Vern. 448."

§ 947. To prevent error, it may be well to observe that, as regards marriage contracts, the rule under consideration, as well as many other rules relating to the specific performance of purely executory contracts, does not apply. "There is," said Lord Hardwicke, "a difference between agreements on marriage being carried into execution and other agreements; for all agreements besides are considered as entire, and if either of the parties fail in performance of the agreement in part, it cannot be decreed in specie, but must be left to an action at Law: in marriage agreements it is otherwise, for though either the relations of the husband or wife should fail in the performance of their part, yet the children may compel a performance: if the mother's father, for instance, hath agreed to give a portion, and the husband's father hath agreed to make a settlement, though the mother's father do not give the portion, yet the children may compel a settlement, for non-performance on one part shall be no impediment to the children's receiving the full benefit of the settlement; so if there be a failure on the part of the father's relations, it is the same."¹ does not apply to marriage

contracts.

contracts are numerous, but as they are not properly within the scope of this volume, they need not here be further noticed.

II. The performance of future acts.

Default
in respect of acts to be done.

§ 948. We may now consider the obligation which lies on the plaintiff, in an action for specific performance, of being ready and willing to perform all acts that on his part yet remain to be performed.

Trustees in bankruptcy.

§ 949. On the ground of this obligation, trustees in bankruptcy are not able as plaintiffs to enforce a contract entered into by the bankrupt, which would have involved covenants on his part, unless they will personally enter into the covenants into which the bankrupt would have entered:¹ whereas where specific performance is sought not by but against persons having a fiduciary interest only, they are only bound to covenant so as to bind the property and not themselves personally.²

Bankruptcy of plaintiff.

§ 950. And so of bankruptcy: if the plaintiff be the vendor, the commission of an act of bankruptcy, though without proof of the existence of any debt to support a petition, is a bar to an action for specific performance, because the plaintiff may be incapable of conveying the estate, which may belong not to him, but to his trustee.³ If on the other hand the plaintiff be the purchaser, he cannot enforce the contract, because he is incapable of so paying the money to the vendor, as that the vendor shall be certain of being able to retain it against the trustees.¹

PART III.
Ch. XX.

§ 951. Bankruptcy does not of itself discharge a contract, either for the sale of an estate of inheritance or for a lease; for, with regard to the latter, the trustee may covenant in the same manner as the bankrupt would have been bound to.² By the 146th section of the statute 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, the vendors of lands might compel the assignees to elect whether they would abide by or decline an agreement for sale:³ and now by the 55th section of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, where any property of the bankrupt consists of unprofitable contracts, the trustee, notwithstanding he has endeavoured to sell, or has taken possession of such property, or exercised any act of ownership in relation thereto, may by writing signed by him, subject to certain provisions of that section, disclaim such property, and thereupon the liability is determined as from the date of the disclaimer.

Disclaimer by trustee.

It has already been noticed that specific performance cannot be enforced against a trustee in bankruptcy or liquidation without his consent.⁴

§ 952. So the insolvency of the plaintiff is a ground of defence:⁵ and to constitute this defence in the case of a continuing contract as a lease, it is not necessary that the plaintiff should be proved to have given up all his property for the benefit of his creditors, but there must be proof of general insolvency, so as to show that the plaintiff is not in a situation to perform the covenants on his part.⁶ Thus Lord Eldon, remarking on the insolvency of an intended lessee as being an objection of more or less weight depending on the circumstances, in the case then before him dissolved an injunction against an ejectment by the landlord.¹

quent affluence.

§ 953. How far insolvency would be an objection, if the plaintiff had subsequently become affluent, does not appear to have been decided.²

Insolvency after assignment of interest.

§ 954. Where the interest under a contract has been assigned, the insolvency of the original contractor, who is the assignor, is no defence, though that of the assignee would be.³

Felony.

§ 955. On like grounds, the felony of a plaintiff would be a bar to specific performance.⁴

Loss of deeds.

§ 956. And the same principle is illustrated by a case where the deeds were destroyed. It was a suit by a vendor on an ordinary contract for sale of lands: in such a contract is implied, as an essential term on the part of the vendor, the proof of the due execution of the deeds which constitute his title, and the delivery up of them to the purchaser: the deeds having been subsequently destroyed by fire, the performance of this term by the plaintiff was rendered impossible, and the contract could not be specifically performed.⁵

CHAPTER XXI.

OF ACTS IN CONTRAVENTION OF THE CONTRACT.

§ 957. In the last chapter we considered cases in which the plaintiff had disentitled himself by default on his part: we shall now consider the closely allied cases where he has disentitled himself, not by default merely, but by acts in fraud or contravention of the contract, or at variance with it, or tending to its rescission and the subversion of the relation established by it. For where the party to a contract who asks the intervention of the Court for its specific execution has been guilty of such conduct, that circumstance may be put forward as a defence to the action. Sometimes the facts may be evidence of a mutual agreement between the parties to rescind the contract: but even where not amounting to this, they may be sufficient to disentitle the plaintiff to ask for the intervention of the Court in specific performance.

PART III.
Ch. xxi.

Nature
of the defence.

§ 958. Still more plain is the case, if the acts be such as would have worked a forfeiture of all benefit of the contract if it had been executed; it would be idle for the Court to compel a grant of that which, if granted, would have been forfeited,¹—to create a legal relation which, if created, would be immediately dissoluble.²

Acts
which would have worked forfeiture.

§ 959. The cases by which this principle is most extensively illustrated are on contracts for leases. With tracts for regard to these, it is well established that where a person, holding under an agreement, commits waste, treats the land in an unhusbandlike manner, or acts in breach of covenants which would be contained in the lease, and for which acts a right of re-entry would accrue to the landlord, such person cannot enforce a specific performance of the contract.¹ The same has been held in respect of covenants to repair.²

Waste.

§ 960. It seems that even where the lease, when executed, would contain no proviso for re-entry, yet such acts, when amounting to a forfeiture, as for example, a gross case of waste, which is in all cases a forfeiture of the place wasted, would prevent a specific performance of the contract.³

The acts must be gross and wilful.

§ 961. In order that acts may thus be a bar to the plaintiff's relief, they must, it has been said, be gross and wilful.⁴ That expression seems to have been originally applied to cases in which the breaches would not work a forfeiture of the legal interest.⁵ If applicable at all to cases where there would be a proviso for re-entry for breach, it seems to mean that the acts must be (1) Such as would work a forfeiture at Common Law, and (2) Such as would not justify or permit relief against the forfeiture in a Court of Equity.

Lease ordered to bear date of
contract.

§ 962. Where the Court of Chancery found such a conflict of evidence as left it in doubt whether there had been such a breach of covenant as to render it proper and expedient to refuse specific performance on that ground, it took the course of directing the lease to bear the date of the contract, and leaving the parties to settle their legal rights at law.⁶

PART III.
Ch. xxi.

Cases under contracts
for leases
classified.

(i.) Where the acts complained of have led to the refusal of relief :

(ii.) Where they have not led to this refusal : and (iii.) Where the relief has been granted and the question of breach left for decision at Common Law.

i. Where the acts complained of have led to refusal of specific performance.

§ 964. In *Thompson v. Guyon*¹ a lease had been granted with a proviso for re-entry on breach of any of the covenants, and a covenant to grant a further term at the end of the original term, if it should not have been sooner determined by the lessee's acts or defaults : the lessee paid all his rent, and continued in possession to the end of the term, but had in fact committed breaches of covenant during the term, of which the lessor was not cognizant till after its determination : a bill for specific performance of the covenant to renew was dismissed, and an injunction against an ejectment was refused, on the ground that the lessor ought not to be placed in a worse position at the expiration of the term than he would have been if he had known of the breach, and availed himself of it during the term.

*Thompson
v. Guyon.*

§ 965. In *Gregory v. Wilson*² possession had been taken under a contract for a lease : breaches were alleged of the covenants which should have been inserted in the lease to insure and also to repair : it was contended as to the first that the receipt of rent after knowledge was a waiver of all the breaches, but the Court held such waiver to have no longer operation

at Law than on the breaches antecedent to the receipt, and not to preclude the effect of the subsequent breaches of the continuing covenant: as to the breaches of the covenant to repair, it was urged that they were neither wilful nor obstinate, and that accordingly they might be relieved against in Equity: but the Court held that as they were not attributable to mistake or accident and were persisted in, they were, in the contemplation of the Court, wilful and obstinate. The bill was accordingly dismissed.

Bond.*

§ 966. In another case the defendant was lessee under a restrictive covenant against carrying on a beershop: the plaintiff got a contract from the defendant for a sub-lease with knowledge of the defendant's title and of the covenant. The plaintiff entered under the contract and persisted in carrying on a beershop: his bill for specific performance was dismissed with costs.¹

ii. Cases where relief has not been refused.

Breach trivial or waived.

§ 967. There may be cases of breach of covenant for which merely nominal damages could be obtained, or there may be cases where a breach having been committed may have been waived: and in favour of such cases an exception may be made to the general rule that the plaintiff must prove performance of the contract on his part.² On this principle, Jessel M.R. in a recent case held that trifling breaches by a husband of the covenants on his part in a separation deed did not debar him from enforcing the deed.³

Breach not working absolute forfeiture.

§ 968. But as regards breaches of covenant under contracts for leases, it seems that the breach which the Court would neglect must be either such a breach as would not work a forfeiture at Common Law, or such that the legal forfeiture would be relieved against in a Court of Equity: for the Court will not relieve more readily whilst the whole thing rests in contract than it will after the legal relation has been actually created.¹ The effect of the 14th section of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, has been to enlarge the area of cases in respect of which relief against forfeiture can be obtained.

PART III.
Ch. XXI.

§ 969. In one case a lessor of mines covenanted to grant a further term, and the lessee covenanted to work the mines: on a suit by the lessee for a specific performance of the covenant to grant a further term, it appeared that the lessee had not worked the mines in consequence of their being drowned out: the Court, though it did not decide the point, inclined to think that this would be no bar to relief.²

Walker v. Jeffreys.

§ 970. The case of *Parker v. Taswell*³ may usefully be consulted as the law bearing on this question was there much considered, but the Court came to the conclusion that according to the true construction of the contract there had been no breach of covenant.

Parker v. Taswell.

§ 971. As regards all cases where the landlord is defendant and raises an objection on the ground of breach of covenants which ought to be in the lease, if the plaintiff shows that the landlord never complained before action, the landlord must prove a strong case to get the benefit of his objection.⁴

Where landlord defendant has not complained before action.

§ 972. In Gordon v. Smart,⁵ where a contract to grant a building lease had been entered into, and the plaintiff, claiming under this contract, had erected a brewhouse on part of the ground, which, it was contended, would be an injury to the adjoining property of the lessor; this was argued, but unsuccessfully, to be a reason for refusing specific performance, Leach V.C. saying that it was not necessarily a nuisance: he left open the question whether, if it had in itself been a nuisance, that would have been a defence in such a suit.

Irish Tenantry
Acts.

§ 973. It seems that under the Irish Tenantry Acts, and perhaps even independently of them, the breach by the tenant of covenants in the lease will not be a bar to specific performance of a covenant for renewal.¹ Certainly they will not so operate unless they be gross and perhaps also wilful.²

iii. Where specific performance was granted and the question of breach of covenants left for decision at Law.

Practice
of the Court of Chancery.

§ 974. Where the Court of Chancery found such a conflict of evidence as left it in doubt whether there had been such a breach of covenant as to render it proper and expedient to refuse specific performance on that ground, it took the course of directing the lease to bear the date of the contract, or a date anterior to the alleged breaches, and required from the plaintiff an undertaking to admit in any action which might be brought under such lease for the recovery of the demised property, or upon any breaches of covenant to be contained in such lease, that such lease was executed on the day on which it should bear date.

Establishment of the practice.

§ 975. This practice was first introduced by the case of Pain v. Coombs:³ it was followed by the Court of Appeal in Lillie v. Legh:⁴ it was discussed, adopted, and approved in Rankin v. Lay,⁵ and had thus become the well-established practice of the Court of Chancery.

iv. General principle further illustrated.

§ 977. Other cases have arisen which illustrate the general principle, in cases not arising out of contracts for leases.

Other illustrations of the principle.

Where an estate was sold upon the condition, amongst others, that immediate possession should be given, and in the course of disputes which subsequently arose about the title, the vendors tendered the purchaser his deposit, demanded back possession, drove the purchaser's stock off the estate, and gave notice to the tenants not to pay their rent to him,—this was conduct inconsistent with the condition of the sale, and was held to operate as a bar to specific performance at the suit of the vendors.¹

§ 978. In another case it was thought by Lord Cranworth doubtful whether a bill could be maintained for the specific performance of an award after the plaintiff had taken proceedings to set it aside.²

Blackett v. Bates.

§ 979. Where a vendor had given notice of his intention to resell under the contract, it was held that he had precluded himself from afterwards seeking for specific performance.³

of good faith.

§ 981. Still it is not every breach of good faith which will prove a bar. Where the plaintiff has been guilty of small breaches of good faith, for which the defendant had a remedy in his own hands, and where, if the interference of the Court were refused, the plaintiff would be without any adequate remedy, such breaches of good faith have been held not to be a bar to relief, though they may affect the costs.²

CHAPTER XXII.

OF THE NON-PERFORMANCE OF CONDITIONS.

§ 982. A CONTRACT may be originally conditional, and contingent upon the performance of some act or the happening of some event. Where that has occurred, the contract becomes absolute, and rests on the same footing for all purposes as if it had been originally made positively and without reference to any contingency.¹ But until it has thus become absolute, no person can be entitled to call for its performance, or to sue for its non-performance.² Where, therefore, the contract is in its origin conditional, it may afford a ground of defence that the condition has not been performed.

§ 983. A case before Lord Romilly M.R. may be cited as an illustration of this obvious principle. The defendant agreed to take a lease of a public house from the plaintiff, provided the retail license were obtained, and the plaintiff agreed to use his utmost efforts to obtain this license. The defendant entered into possession to qualify himself as a publican for the license and obtained a license from the justices, but under compulsion of the justices and threat of refusal, he gave to the justices a verbal promise that no excisable liquor should be sold for consumption on the premises. It was held that the condition was not performed and specific performance was refused.¹ Again, in the case of a covenant to renew a lease it was held that the performance of the covenants to repair was a condition precedent, and the breach of them constituted a defence.²

express or implied.

§ 984. A contract may be conditional either by express words of condition, or because the Court, upon a consideration of its terms, gathers that to have been the intention of the contracting parties. This is of course a question to be decided on the terms of each contract. It will, therefore, be sufficient briefly to allude to two or three cases of practical moment.

§ 985. In a recent case there was a contract to grant a lease to a nominee of the plaintiff, or to a company which he intended to form: he had not formed the company: it was held that his naming a nominee and the acceptance of the lease by the nominee constituted a condition precedent for default of which he could not obtain judgment.³

contracts.

§ 986. In the case of contracts by railway companies, the question has sometimes arisen how far they are conditional on the formation of the railway. In one case, where a company before incorporation contracted with a landowner, the contract provided for a bridge over the railway, a certain deviation of the line, and other works entirely dependent on its formation, and also for the payment of 4,500*l.* as purchase-money for certain lands to be taken by the company, and for consequential damage to the landowner's estate. The contract was expressly conditional on the Act passing. It passed, but the railway was abandoned, and the time for taking the lands had expired. Nine-tenths of the contract, as Knight Bruce L.J. remarked, had become impracticable by reason of the abandonment of the railway: and the Lords Justices, though not deciding the point, evidently inclined to the opinion that the contract was conditional, not only on the passing of the Act, but on the making of the railway.¹ And in the subsequent case of *Lord James Stuart v. London and North-Western Railway Co.*² Lord Cranworth L.J. expressed a similar opinion. These cases have been doubted,³ but rather on the point of jurisdiction than of the construction of the contracts: and they have certainly received great support from the case of *Gage v. Newmarket Railway Co.*⁴ There the company had covenanted with the plaintiff that, in the event of a Bill for extending their powers being passed in the then present session, the company should, before they should enter on any part of the plaintiff's land, pay him 4,900*l.* purchase-money for any portion of his land not exceeding forty-three acres, which the company might require and take, and 7,100*l.* as landlord's compensation for damages arising by the severance thereof. It was held that the covenant was not for the payment of an absolute sum as a consideration for the plaintiff's withdrawing his opposition, but a payment as purchase-money and compensation for severance, which could not be due when no land was required or taken, and no severance effected for which compensation could arise. In the case of *The Scottish North-Eastern Railway Co. v. Stewart*⁵ the House of Lords arrived at a similar conclusion upon the contract there in question.

CHAPTER XXIII.

OF THE INCAPACITY OF THE DEFENDANT TO PERFORM HIS PART OF THE CONTRACT.

§ 988. THERE are certain cases in which the contract is construed to be conditional on individual capacity, or on the continued existence of some state of facts or thing. "Contracts for personal service, for matters dependent on personal capacity, as to write a book or paint a picture, are conditional on the continuance of the ability, mental or corporeal, to perform them."¹ So again, where from the nature of the contract it appears that the parties contracted upon the footing of the existence at the time of performance of some particular specified thing, and there is no express or implied warranty that the thing shall exist, a condition is implied that the party to do the act shall be excused, in case before breach performance becomes impossible by the perishing of the specified thing without the default of the party. This principle has been applied to a contract to let a music hall, which was destroyed by fire before the day arrived;² and to a contract to sell 200 tons of potatoes grown on particular land.³ is a positive contract to do a thing not illegal, the contractor must perform it or pay damages for not doing it, though it has become impossible. On such contracts no action can be maintained, whether for damages or for specific performance.

Where incapacity of defendant a defence.

§ 990. But in contracts positive and not conditional, the incapacity of the defendant to perform his part of the contract, whilst it furnishes no answer to an action for damages,¹ affords a ground of defence against specific performance.² This contention does not, like that in the case of conditional contracts, rest upon the nature or terms of the contracts, nor, like that grounded on the capacity of the plaintiff to perform his part, rest upon any principle of justice that operates in favour of the defendant, but is based upon the necessity of the case arising out of the nature of the relief sought.

Instances.

§ 991. Where a bill was filed against the provisional committee of a projected railway company for the specific performance of a contract to deliver to the plaintiff a certain number of scrip certificates; there being no allegation that the defendants had any scrip which they could deliver, but a statement from which the contrary might rather be inferred, a demurrer was allowed on the ground that the bill did not show any capacity in the defendants to perform the contract.³ So where a defendant showed that he had sold the property in question for a valuable consideration to a third party, no performance could be enforced:⁴ and so again, assuming that a covenant to produce deeds can be obtained by way of specific performance of a covenant for further assurance, it seems that the Court will not attempt so to carry it into effect where the deeds are not in the proposed covenantor's power.¹ So again a contract by directors to accept shares in payment of calls being legally impossible of performance cannot be enforced.² And where a charitable corporation, which had no power of selling except under the Lands Clauses Act, contracted to sell land without having the price settled in the manner prescribed by the Act, the Court refused to decree specific performance.³

§ 992. Again, lunacy supervening after the contract and before performance may prevent the lunatic from doing a personal act in performance of a contract, as e.g., entering into a covenant for quiet enjoyment:⁴ though under the Lunacy Act, 1890, the Court may vest in the plaintiff the property contracted to be sold by the lunatic.

Lunacy.

§ 993. It is immaterial for this purpose that the defendant is the author of his own incapacity. "Put the extreme case," said Kindersley V.C., "of a vendor burning a title-deed: the Court could not make a decree that he should deliver it up, and be imprisoned if he does not."⁵

Defendant author of his own incapacity.

§ 994. It is not necessary to the specific performance of a contract, that it should be one which the parties at the time of entering into it had the power of carrying into effect, nor one with regard to which it depends on themselves alone whether they would ever be able to perform it. For where a party enters into a contract without at the time having the power of performing it, and afterwards acquires that power, he is bound to perform the contract he entered into.¹ Therefore a defendant cannot object at an early stage of an action for specific performance that he has not the interest he has contracted to sell, as he cannot be permitted to say that he did not mean to acquire that interest.² And so where a defendant had contracted to give a certain indemnity to be secured on real estate, and alleged that he had not real estate of sufficient value, and contended that the plaintiff ought to accept a personal indemnity, it was held that he was bound to purchase real estate of sufficient value.³

Illustrations of the principle.

§ 995. The same principle is exemplified in a case which was decided in the 34th year of Charles II. During the civil wars, the then Duke of Newcastle had gone abroad, and whilst he was thus absent, the defendant, who was his heir apparent, without authority from the then Duke, sold and conveyed to the plaintiff certain estates of the Duke, and received the purchase-money, and applied it for the benefit of the family. The defendant having subsequently succeeded to the dukedom and the estates in question as heir, he was, by Lord Nottingham, held bound to make good his sale, and was decreed to do so accordingly.⁴ At the time of the contract, specific performance would have been impossible on the part of the defendant, but it had subsequently become possible by the devolution of the estate contracted to be sold.

Application to parliament required.

§ 996. On the same principle, the Court will not in all cases consider as void, contracts, whether by private persons or companies, which require the interposition of the legislature before they can be carried into effect, and accordingly will in the meanwhile protect the property in issue.⁵

§ 997. With regard to real estate, the statute 32 Hen. VIII. c. 9 prevents the sale of a pretended right to land by a person out of possession; but if a person, instead of selling a pretended right, contracts on a certain future day to convey an estate, and he is on that day possessed of it, the contract appears not to be within the operation of the statute, and to be binding on both parties.¹

§ 998. And so also with regard to goods, the legality of contracts for the sale of such property not at the time in the possession of the vendor is now well established;² so that, notwithstanding an opposite decision of Lord Macclesfield,³ such a contract would now probably be enforced, if in other respects it fell under the jurisdiction of the Court.⁴

§ 999. As the consent of a third party is, or may be, a thing impossible to procure, a defendant who has entered into a contract to the performance of which such consent is necessary, will not, in case such consent cannot be procured, be decreed to obtain it, and thus perform an impossibility.⁵

commit him to gaol until she yielded.¹ But the absurdity of such a course is obvious; because the Court of Chancery was thus putting all the compulsion it could upon the wife to induce her to do an act, of which the essence is that it is done without compulsion; the Court of Chancery was distressing her to give her consent, whilst the Court of Common Pleas was examining her to see that she was acting from free will alone; and it is now accordingly established that the Court will not interfere specifically to perform contracts where a wife's consent is requisite, and she refuses to give it.² But in cases of contracts by the husband and wife, it will enforce the contract against the husband, with compensation for the interest which the wife's refusal has prevented the plaintiff from acquiring.³

cy près.

§ 1001. It must not however be understood that the incapacity of the defendant to perform a contract literally and exactly in all its parts will enable him to refuse to perform it in substance. The plaintiff has in many cases the right to call on the defendant to perform the contract as best he can, though the defendant's incapacity to perform it fully might be a bar to him, if he filled the position of plaintiff. All the cases in which a plaintiff enforces a contract so far as the defendant can perform it and obtains compensation from him for the part unperformed are instances of this.⁴ Some other cases of the same sort may be mentioned.

completion, the issue in tail of the one dying would not be bound by the contract; but it seems that the purchaser might, if he chose, sue the survivor for a conveyance of his moiety on payment of a half of the purchase-money.¹

PART III.

§ 1003. So in Carey v. Stafford,² in the Exchequer in 1725, where a man executed a deed affecting to convey lands therein described of the yearly value of 22*l.* to his servant, and no such lands existed, the Court compelled him to convey lands of equal value.

Carey v.
Stafford.

§ 1004. And so if a copyholder were to contract to grant a lease for a longer term than the custom allowed, he would, it seems, be compelled to effectuate his contract in substance, by from time to time executing leases for such terms as he could, till he had made up the term contracted for.³

Lease by copyholder.

§ 1005. Errington's case,⁴ though not on a specific performance, is another illustration of this principle. He had contracted for 9,000*l.* to build a bridge over the Tyne, and to maintain it for seven years, and had entered into a bond in that sum conditioned for performance of the contract: the bridge was built, but thrown down by a flood; and it was found that no bridge on that site could stand. Thereupon he filed his bill for relief from the bond; and upon his building a bridge upon a neighbouring site where it could stand, and submitting to an issue of quantum damnificatus by the change of site, he was relieved from the penalty of the bond.

Errington's
case.

§ 1006. Where a contract is in its original form obnoxious to difficulties on the score of illegality, but can nevertheless be lawfully performed in substance, the Court will so model it as to effectuate this purpose. Thus it having been made by statute illegal to contract for the tenant to pay the tithe rent-charge, a contract for a lease, stipulating that the tenant should pay a certain sum for rent and also the rent-charge, may be carried into effect by the Court by means of a lease reserving as rent the two sums in the contract treated respectively as rent and rent-charge.¹

Modelling confined to formal matters.

§ 1007. But such modelling can only apply to matters of form. So where an incumbent was under a statute able to grant a lease with a rent payable quarterly, and he contracted to grant a lease with rent payable half-yearly, the Court declined to compel the lessee to take a lease with a reservation of rent payable quarterly: the mode of reservation of rent was held to be an essential part of the contract.²

Contract partly invalidated by legislation.

§ 1008. The Court will probably be anxious to execute a contract cy près, where by subsequent legislation a contract originally valid may have become invalid in part. Thus where a Dean and Chapter, prior to the disabling statute of 13 Eliz., covenanted for the renewal of a lease for ninety-nine years, and the plaintiff brought his bill asking for a renewal for such term as the corporation could grant under the statute, it was ultimately decided by the House of Lords, in accordance with the opinion of Jekyll M.R., but overruling the judgments of Lord King, Lord Raymond C.J., and Price J., that the plaintiff was entitled to this cy près relief.³

Contract
modelled so as to be possible.

§ 1009. It seems that in some cases in which the contract would be incapable of being specifically enforced in its very terms for other reasons than illegality, it may be executed by the Court cy près if such a plan be feasible. In one case there was a contract entered into by the defendants within two years to

B. to convey certain estates to the plaintiffs, or within the same period to petition the House of Lords for, and to use their utmost endeavours to procure, an Act of Parliament for substituting a trustee in place of the heir, in case such heir could not be found, or there was no heir: on a bill filed for the performance of this contract, the Court decreed the defendants to allow their names to be used in an application to Parliament for the Act.¹ A contract by a person to use his utmost endeavours seems to be one which the Court could not specifically execute.

PART III.

§ 1010. In some railway cases, the Court has shown a great inclination to regard what it considers as the substance of the contract. In one case, company A. contracted with the plaintiff for the purchase of the lands required for their proposed line, and for the withdrawal of his opposition in consideration of 20,000*l.* to be paid to him, in case their Bill should pass into law: there was a rival company B., which would require different lands of the plaintiff: by an agreement, made between the two companies during the proceedings before the Committee of the Commons, it was agreed that a reference should be made as to which of the two lines should be carried into effect, and that the successful company should take to all the engagements of the other. The line of company B. was approved, and company A.'s Bill was accordingly withdrawn; company B. refused to pay the plaintiff the 20,000*l.*, alleging, amongst other things, that it was conditional on the Bill of company A. passing, and that the lands required were not those contracted for; but on a bill filed by the plaintiff against them, their demurrer was overruled by Shadwell V.C. and

Lord Cottenham.¹ In a subsequent case, however, the same Vice Chancellor considered the passing of a Bill of an amalgamated company sufficiently distinct from the passing of the Bill of one of the companies to relieve the amalgamated company from a contract binding in case of the Bill of the one company passing.² The decree was affirmed by Lord Cottenham, but on a different ground.³

Impossibility of one alternative.

§ 1011. Where a contract is in the alternative, so as to give an election to the party to perform it, and one of the alternatives is at the time of the contract, or subsequently becomes, impossible, the question arises how far the contracting party is bound to the performance of the alternative that remains possible. The cases seem to divide themselves into (i.) those where one alternative is impossible at the time of the contract, (ii.) where it becomes so subsequently to the contract, but before election, by the act of God, or (iii.) by the act of the other party to the contract, or (iv.) by the act of a stranger, and (v.) those cases where the impossibility arises after election. These different cases must be briefly considered.

i. One alternative originally impossible.

§ 1012. (i.) Where at the time of the contract one alternative is impossible or void, the party to execute the contract is bound to the performance of the other alternative.⁴ So where the condition of a bond was to pay a certain sum, or render in execution a person who had been previously discharged, and the Court held the latter alternative illegal and void, it was decided that the obligor was bound to perform the other, and that not having done so, the bond was forfeited.¹ And where an award directed that a sum of money should be paid or be secured to be paid, and did not define the security to be given, and the question was whether the award was not void for uncertainty: it was held not to be so, on the ground that if an award direct one of two things to be done in the alternative, and one is void for uncertainty or is impossible, it is yet incumbent on the party to perform the other of them.²

PART III.

§ 1013. (ii.) The leading authority on the second class of cases is Laughter's case,³ where it is laid down, "that where a condition of a bond consists of two parts in the disjunctive, and both are possible at the time of the bond made, and afterwards one of them becomes impossible by the act of God, the obligor is not bound to perform the other part." On this case it may be remarked in the first place, that the case itself did not require the enunciation of the principle,⁴ as both alternatives in the bond there put in suit were rendered impossible;⁵ and in the second place, it is to be observed, that subsequent decisions show that the principle was stated too broadly, and that even at Common Law the intention of the parties has been gathered from the particular language of each instrument. In the case of Studholmes v. Mandell,⁶ the Court said that the rule and reason of Laughter's case ought not to be taken so largely as Coke has reported it, but according to the nature of the case; and Treby C.J. quoted a case in which a bond was conditioned either to make a lease for the life of the obligee before such a day or to pay 100l., and the obligee having died before the day, it was held in the Common Pleas that the obligor should pay the 100l. And in Drummond v. Duke of Bolton,¹ in an action on a bond conditioned to pay or secure to the plaintiff or her children by William Ashe, her then intended husband, 3,000l. within six months after the defendant should become Duke of Bolton, the defendant pleaded that William Ashe died without having any children before the defendant became Duke: but the plea was overruled, on the ground that the intention of the parties must be regarded, and that it could never have been their intention that the money should not be paid to the plaintiff in case she should not have a child by William Ashe at the time of the plaintiff becoming Duke, though if she then had a child, the defendant might have had his election to whom to pay the money.

Barkworth v. Young.

§ 1014. And this view of the law was fully supported in a case before Kindersley V.C., on a promise by A., on the marriage of his daughter with B., that he would at his death leave to his daughter an equal portion with his other children. The daughter died in the lifetime of her father, leaving children, and this circumstance was argued to be a discharge from the contract by an act of God. But the Vice Chancellor held that the contract might have been performed in either of two ways,—namely, by A.'s making a provision for his daughter by will or by his dying intestate: and that though the death of the daughter precluded him from performing it in the first way, he was not thereby exonerated from performing it in the second, and that the bill, by which the husband prayed for an equal share in the testator's residuary estate, was not on that ground demurrable.² His

Honour, after referring to some of the previous cases, expressed his opinion that it is impossible to lay down any universal proposition either way, and that each case must depend upon the intention of the parties: but that where this intention is clear that one of the parties shall do a certain thing, but he is allowed his option to do it in one or other of two modes, and one of these modes becomes impossible by the act of God, he is bound to perform it in the other mode: and that, in the case before the Court, it was manifestly the intention of the parties that, in one way or other, the daughter should have an equal share of the testator's property; and that if the father was prevented by the act of God from performing his obligation in one way, he was bound to perform it in the other way, which was possible.¹

§ 1016. (iii.) Where one of the alternatives becomes impossible by the act or default of the party for whose benefit the contract is to be executed, the other alternative is discharged and need not be performed.¹ Therefore in debt on an obligation conditioned for the delivery up by the defendant to the plaintiff of three obligations in which the plaintiff was bound to the defendant, or for the execution to the plaintiff of such release of them as should be devised by the plaintiff's Counsel before Michaelmas, a plea that neither the plaintiff nor his Counsel devised any release before Michaelmas was held good by a majority of the Judges in the Queen's Bench, on the ground that, where the obligee disables the obligor to perform the one part, the law discharges him from the other.² This authority was followed by another case in the same Court, in which, in debt on a bond by the defendant conditioned to grant an annuity within six months after the death of A., and if he refused, on request then to pay 300*l.*, a plea that no grant had been tendered within six months was held good.³

CHAPTER XXIV.

OF THE RESCISSION OF THE CONTRACT.

PART III.
Ch. xxiv.

Grounds
of rescis-
sion.

§ 1020. THE rescission of a contract necessarily constitutes a bar to its performance by either of the parties to it. The rescission may result from—

(i.) A simple agreement between the parties to rescind the contract ;

(ii.) An agreement between the parties to new terms which put an end to the terms of the old contract ;

(iii.) An agreement between the original parties and a third person, by which the third person takes the place of one of the original contractors ;

(iv.) An exercise of a power to rescind reserved by the contract to one or both of the contractors ;

(v.) An exercise of the right to rescind which results to the injured party from misrepresentation, fraud or mistake in relation to the contract ;

(vi.) An exercise of the right to rescind which results to one party from the other party's absolute refusal to perform the contract or unreasonable delay in its performance ;

(vii.) An exercise of the right to rescind which results to one party from the other party's having made performance impossible ;

(viii.) An exercise of the right to rescind which results to one party from the want of mutuality on the part of the other contracting party ;

(ix.) An exercise of a statutory power to rescind in case of bankruptcy.

i. A simple agreement to rescind.

§ 1021. Generally speaking, the parties to a contract, supposing them both to continue sui juris and capable of contracting, have a right to determine it by an agreement to rescind it, or, to use other words, a waiver and abandonment by mutual consent of the parties: and this they may do even when the contract between them affects the interests of some third person; except, it seems, where there has been a part performance of it affecting the third person. So that where A. by deed contracted with B. that A.'s son should reside with and be brought up by B., who covenanted to leave him certain property, and there was no appreciable part performance as regards the child, so that his condition in life had not been altered, and no expectation on his part was defeated, it was held that A. and B. might by agreement rescind the deed, though it would, it seems, have been different if there had been any part performance affecting the child.¹

§ 1022. An agreement to rescind a contract which is in writing² or under seal³ may clearly in Equity be by parol.

§ 1023. Against this conclusion various arguments have at various times been raised: it has been urged that the rule of law does not allow the variation of a contract that has been reduced to writing to be evidenced by parol; but to this it has been replied that rescission is not variation, that the law allows parol evidence of matters collateral to the contract,⁴ and that rescission or waiver being in its nature subsequent and collateral to the contract may therefore be proved by parol testimony.¹

§ 1024. Again, it has been urged that the Statute of Frauds precludes parol evidence of rescission of contracts relating to land: for a contract to waive a purchase of land as much relates to land as the original contract.² But it is replied that the rescinding contract is not the contract on which the action is brought, and that whilst the statute provides that no action shall be brought on any contract of the descriptions there specified, except it be in writing, it does not provide that every such written contract shall support an action. In the result it is perfectly well ascertained that a contract in writing, and by law required to be in writing, may in Equity be rescinded by parol;³ and waiver by mutual parol agreement therefore furnishes a sufficient defence to an action for specific performance.⁴

Agreement to rescind evidenced by conduct.

§ 1025. Any circumstances or course of conduct from whence can be clearly deduced an agreement to put an end to the original contract will amount to a rescission of it. Thus, to give one or two examples: where, on default in payment of the purchase-money, one party said to the other that there must be an end of the negotiation, and the other assented, the contract was held to have been rescinded.⁵ And where the vendor was allowed for a long period to remain in possession, and the purchaser's representatives seventeen years afterwards treated themselves, in a deed between the parties, as entitled to interest on the debt which had been the consideration for the sale, and not to the rents and profits of the land, the contract was held to have been waived.¹

PART III.
Ch. xxiv.

§ 1026. But the Court must be satisfied of this total abandonment by both parties of the contract. “The Court,” said Lord St. Leonards, “requires as clear evidence of the waiver as of the existence of the contract itself, and will not act upon less.”² And in another case his Lordship said that, unless a party has by his conduct forfeited his right, “abandonment of a contract, according to the law of this Court, is a contract in itself;” and accordingly he refused to hold a loose conversation, which was alleged as a waiver of a contract for a lease, to amount to such a new contract.³

Evidence
must be clear.

§ 1027. To these cases may be likened those where an absolute refusal of one party gives rise to a right to rescind in the other: the refusal must be clear, total, and unqualified.⁴

Absolute refusal of one party.

§ 1028. An agreement to rescind an existing contract must amount to a total abandonment of the whole contract, and not to a partial waiver of some of its terms: for to allow of such a proceeding in the case of a written contract would be to have a contract proved partly by writing, and partly by parol:⁵ it would be a parol novation of a written contract, which is inadmissible where the law requires the contract to be evidenced by writing:⁶ and therefore the agreement, or the circumstances from which it is inferred, must show an absolute dissolution and abandonment of the contract.¹

Cases at Common Law.

§ 1029. The cases, of which many have arisen at Common Law (and which will be considered subsequently²), of the rescission of a contract by the one party, based on an absolute refusal to perform by the other, may well be brought under the head of agreement to rescind.

Conduct may prevent party's rights, yet not be a rescission.

§ 1030. It is to be borne in mind that the conduct of one party which may debar him from insisting on a contract may yet not prevent its being enforced against him or amount to a rescission of it:³ and further, that there are many cases in which there has been such a departure in conduct from the contract between the parties, that the Court will refuse to execute the contract, though the effect of that conduct may not have been to substitute a valid contract for the old one, or absolutely to rescind the old one for all purposes.⁴

ii. An agreement upon new terms.

Second agreement inconsistent.

§ 1031. Where the parties to a contract come to a fresh agreement of such a kind that the two cannot stand together, the effect of the second agreement is to rescind the first. This is one form of novatio in the Roman Law.⁵

ation not

² See infra, § 1060.

³ Price v. Assheton, 1 Y. & C. Ex. 82.

tion as to extinguish that contract. Thus where there was a contract for a lease, and a parol agreement was subsequently made for the reduction of the rent which, it was contended, worked a rescission of the original contract, Lord St. Leonards said, "I should be sorry to hold that because a landlord abates the rent for a time or permanently, he therefore abandons the whole contract. . . . I should do a most mischievous thing were I to hold that a mere abatement of rent, which occurs every day, would altogether put an end to the existing contract, and create a new tenancy from year to year. The abatement of the rent was rather a confirmation of the existing tenancy, with a relaxation of one of the terms of it."¹

PART III.
Ch. xxiv.

ing to novation.

§ 1033. So also a suggestion made by either party after contract for the purpose of obviating any difficulties in the completion of it, will not be taken to amount to a novation: so to hold would be to preclude parties from endeavouring to remove objections by concessions of any kind.²

Concession.

§ 1034. But where, the defendant being in possession of a house under a contract for a lease, the plaintiff and the defendant entered into a further contract to the effect that the plaintiff would accept H. W. as his tenant in lieu of the defendant and on the same terms, the defendant undertaking to guarantee the rent during H. W.'s tenancy, and H. W. accordingly for several years occupied the property and paid rent, it was held that the latter contract must be considered a substitution for the former.³

Moore v.
Marrable.

§ 1035. As it is the existence of the new contract that works the extinction of the old, this new one must, of course, be a valid contract: so that, for instance, where a second contract is alleged, but without consideration, the original contract will remain intact, and may be executed without regard to the second.¹

Evidence. § 1036. This makes it requisite to consider the evidence of the new contract alleged.

1. Original
contract
by parol.

(1.) Where the original contract is by parol, the new one may, of course, be by parol also.

2. Original
contract
in writing.

§ 1037. (2.) Where the original contract was in writing, though not by law required so to be, the new contract may be evidenced in any way which establishes it according to the principles of the Court. Thus a contract, though under seal, may in the contemplation of a Court of Equity be waived by a course of conduct from whence the presumption of a new contract in substitution arises. "In ordinary partnerships," said Lord Eldon, "nothing is more clear than this, that although partners enter into a written agreement, stating the terms upon which the joint concern is to be carried on, yet if there be a long course of dealing, or a course of dealing not long, but still so long as to demonstrate that they have all agreed to change the terms of the original written agreement, they may be held to have changed those terms by conduct."² And accordingly, in another case, where a contract for a partnership was decreed to be specifically executed, the Court directed an inquiry whether any and what variations had been made in the original contract by the consent of the partners, and directed the deed to be settled by the Master having regard to such variations.³

3. Original
contract by law required to be in writing.

§ 1038. (3.) Where the original contract is by law required to be in writing, the new one must be in writing also, if the plaintiff insists on it as part of his case; so that, for instance, where the relation of landlord and tenant is constituted by writing, a contract for an abatement of rent set up by the plaintiff must be in writing also.¹ From the principles of the Court, however, in regard to part performance, an exception naturally arises, as the new contract may in this, as in any other case, be by parol, if supported by acts of part performance. Thus, for example, where W. leased to N. a house for eleven years, and was to allow £20 for repairs, and this contract was signed and sealed by the parties, and N., finding that the repairs of the house would cost more than £20, laid out a further sum, in consequence of W.'s having promised to enlarge the term, but without mentioning for what term: Jekyll M.R. carried the parol contract into effect, on the ground that it was a new contract, and that the laying out the money was a part performance on the one part, which made it needful to execute the parol contract on the other.²

PART III.
Ch. xxiv.

§ 1039. But where the new contract is relied on only as an extinguishment of the old one, the mere fact that it is not in writing, and so could not be put in suit, seems to be no ground for denying its effect in rescinding the original contract. The Statute of Frauds does not make the parol contract void, but only prevents an action upon it; and it does not seem to be necessary to the extinction of one contract by another that the second contract could be actively enforced. The point has never, it is believed, been matter of decision.³ But in point of principle it seems to stand on the same footing as a simple agreement to rescind.

Ch. xxiv.iii. An agreement with a third person.

Third person substituted.

§ 1040. An agreement between the original parties and a third person, by which the third person takes the place of one of the original contractors, creates a new contract on the old terms between the new parties and rescinds the original contract.

Morton's case.

§ 1041. So where M. agreed with a company to take certain shares, and no payment was made by M., so that according to the contention of the liquidator of the company he had no right to the shares: and M. then transferred the shares to G., and G. was registered: it was held that, assuming the contention to be correct, the contract with M. was resting in fieri, and the transfer to which the company was a party constituted a new contract to take the same shares between the company and G., and that the old contract with M. was discharged by the new contract with G.¹

Re-sale of shares.

§ 1042. So again where A. sold shares to B., and B. sold them to C., and A. executed a deed of transfer to C., which C. refused to register; A. brought a bill for specific performance against B., but it was held that A., having assigned the shares to C., had determined the privity of contract with B., and that he could not make a title to the shares. The main question in the case was whether C. was merely the nominee of B., or there was a substantive contract between A. and C.: the latter was the view taken under the circumstances.²

Novation in sales of shares.

§ 1043. In the chapter on contracts for the sale of shares,³ it will be seen that questions of novation by the introduction of a third person arise upon sales on the Stock Exchange. The reader is referred to that chapter for their bearing on the question of novation.

§ 1044. There are two other classes of contracts in respect of which the question of novation has frequently arisen—the first relating to continued dealings between A. and one set of partners and A. and another set of partners successors in trade to the former; and the second relating to the dealings of a person insured in one company and continuing to make payments to another with which the first had amalgamated, or to which it had assigned its business. The full discussion of these classes of cases would be too remote from the subject of these pages to be here proper.

PART III.
Ch. xxiv.

Other cases of novation.

iv. Exercise of a power to rescind reserved by the contract.

§ 1045. Generally speaking, one party to a contract cannot rescind it, except by consent of the other party: but this general principle is liable to exceptions. The first that falls to be noticed is where the contract reserves to one or both of the contracting parties a power in certain specified circumstances to rescind the contract.¹ Such stipulations are frequent in contracts for the sale of land. It will be desirable briefly to consider these stipulations.

Express power to rescind.

§ 1046. When a contract stipulates that on the happening of a certain event it shall be void, the construction put upon it by the Courts generally is, that it may on this event be rescinded by the party injured by such event. Thus a proviso that in case the vendor of an estate cannot deduce a good title, or the purchaser shall not pay the money at the appointed day, the contract shall be void, has been held to mean that in the former case the purchaser, and in the latter the vendor, may avoid the contract, and not that the contract is utterly void.²

PART III.
Ch. xxiv.Right, how to be exercised.

§ 1047. A right to rescind a contract on the non-performance of an act, which act it is the duty of the party invested with the right of rescission to perform if he can, will not give such party a right to refuse to perform his part of the contract, but will be held to apply where the act cannot be done: thus where there is a condition that, if any objection shall not be removed within a limited time, the vendor shall be at liberty to annul the contract, the vendor is not entitled to neglect to remove any objection, and then, on the strength of his own neglect, to annul the contract;¹ but the condition will entitle him to rescind the contract if, having done all that is incumbent on him, he fail to show a good title.² But where the right to rescind is limited to arise in case of his being unable or unwilling to do the act, the case is of course different, and he is generally exempted at his election from any obligation to do the act.³ The person entitled to rescind is not bound to give notice of his intention so to do, nor to afford a locus poenitentiae to the other side.⁴

Must the exercise be reasonable?

§ 1048. Where the power to rescind is reserved in the event of the vendor's being unable or unwilling to comply with a requisition by the purchaser, can he exercise the power arbitrarily at his own will and pleasure, or can he not? Is he at liberty to exercise it without showing some reasonable ground for refusing to comply with the requisition, or must he show such ground? Opinions have not been uniform on this point. In one case⁵ it was observed by Bacon V.C.

that "the unwillingness is as much a part of the contract as the inability." In an earlier case¹ Turner L.J. seems to have been of a different opinion; and it must now be considered as the result of the authorities and dicta that a vendor cannot capriciously and arbitrarily rescind.² So where a vendor who had reserved such a power to himself, in case of requisitions on conveyances, unreasonably insisted that certain words should be inserted in a conveyance, and the purchaser rightly resisted the insertion, it was held by Pearson J. that the vendor had no right to rescind.³

§ 1050. Instances of the exercise of this right to rescind may be found in the following cases.⁴ The contract stipulated that if from any cause whatever the purchase was not completed by the time specified, the vendor was to be at liberty to annul the contract. At the day appointed the parties met, and the vendor offered and the purchaser accepted the vendor's undertaking to satisfy certain unsatisfied requisitions. Nevertheless the purchaser refused to pay the purchase-money, whereupon the vendor said that he would annul the contract if the money was not paid: the purchaser refused to pay till the requisitions were satisfied: the vendor on the same day annulled the contract by notice, and successfully maintained a bill

§ 1051. In another case, one condition provided that if any objection to title were persisted in, the vendor might rescind the contract: another provided that if any mistake should appear in the description of the property or of the vendor's interest therein, compensation should be given. A question arose as to the rights of the lord of the manor to certain mines or minerals: the purchaser claimed compensation and the vendor rescinded: the purchaser brought his bill for performance with compensation: the vendor relied on his rescission. The Court held that the question in dispute was one of title, and that the vendor was therefore entitled to rescind.²

without any title.

§ 1052. A condition enabling the vendor to annul the sale if the purchaser should make any objection or requisition which the vendor should be unwilling on the ground of expense or otherwise to comply with, does not enable a vendor who shows no title whatever to rescind. Such a vendor was consequently made to pay damages for his non-performance.³

Within what time right must be exercised.

§ 1053. Whether a right to rescind a contract must be exercised within a reasonable time after it arises, or at any time before it is waived or abandoned, may be open to question.⁴ But it is conceived to be clear that a party who, having a right to rescind, either himself does some act under the contract which involves or implies the continued existence of the contract, or suffers the other party to do such act without asserting the right to rescind, has thereby lost that right.

§ 1054. Thus where conditions of sale stipulated that if there was any objection which the vendor should be unable or unwilling to remove he might rescind the contract, and the purchaser should be entitled to his deposit without interest or costs, it has been held that such a condition is confined to the objections first taken after the abstract is delivered, and that a treaty between the parties for the completion of the purchase is a waiver of the condition,¹ it being, of course, evidence of the vendor's willingness to remove the objection. Such a condition will apply, if it be acted on by the vendor the moment the defect is known to him, but will not allow him to spend time in fruitless efforts to remove the objection, and then to rescind the contract on the terms of the condition.² And so where money is payable by instalments, and there is a power to rescind on breach of the contract, the receipt of money due on a subsequent instalment is a waiver of the right to rescind for default in respect of a previous one.³ So the receipt of royalty at a reduced rate is a bar to the exercise of a right of rescission reserved on the non-payment of royalty at a higher rate.⁴

Waiver
or loss of right to rescind.

§ 1055. Where the contract stipulates for a right of rescission in respect of separate breaches, the waiver of one will not waive another: so that where there was a contract for the payment of money by instalments, and that time should be of the essence, and further, a power to rescind on breach of the contract, it was held that each default of payment of an instalment at the stipulated time was a fresh breach of the contract, on which the right to rescind arose.¹

§ 1056. Where there are conditions for compensation and for rescission² the Courts will, for obvious reasons, generally construe them so as to confine the right to rescind to cases not within the condition for compensation. Thus, in a case in which particulars of sale by error, but without fraud or gross negligence on the part of the vendor, described part of the property as a customary leasehold holden of a manor renewable every twenty-one years on payment of a customary fine, and the property was in fact holden only for a term of twenty-one years with no customary right of renewal; the fourth condition of sale, after providing for the delivery of the abstract and of objections to the title, stipulated that the vendor should be at liberty at any time after the delivery of such objections to vacate the sale, and that the deposit was thereupon to be returned without interest, costs, or other compensation; the fifth condition of sale provided that the purchaser should accept the existing lease and the assignment to the vendor as a sufficient title to this property; and the sixth condition stipulated that if through any mistake the estate should be improperly described or any error or mis-statement be inserted in the particular, the same should not vitiate the sale, but that compensation should be made by either party, as the case might be. The purchaser filed a bill for specific performance with compensation, contending that the error was within the sixth condition: the vendor resisted performance and sought to vacate the contract, on the ground that it was within the fourth condition. Lord Hatherley (then V.C.), referring to the fifth condition as explaining the use of the word title in the condition, held that this was rather a mis-statement of the subject-matter of the sale than of the vendor's title to it, and therefore within the sixth and not within the fourth condition of sale; and he accordingly enforced specific performance with compensation:¹ and Lord Romilly M.R. put a like construction on similar conditions in a similar case.²

§ 1057. A right to rescind on the ground of the vendor being unable or unwilling to meet a requisition cannot be exercised after the vendor has sought to obtain a decision in his favour on the requisition, and judgment has been given against him: and this is the case even when the condition gives the power expressly, notwithstanding any previous litigation: litigation in this clause does not include adverse judicial decision.³

§ 1058. It remains to remark that the plaintiff, bringing an action for the specific performance of a contract, may claim in the alternative that, if the contract cannot be enforced, it may be rescinded and delivered up to be cancelled,⁴ provided that the alternative relief is based on the same state of facts, though with different conclusions as to law.⁵ When the action is brought by the vendor, and the purchaser has been in possession, this alternative claim may embrace an account of the rents and profits.⁶ But, for the reason already stated, an action to set aside a transaction for fraud or, in the alternative, for specific performance of a compromise could not be sustained.¹ And notwithstanding the provisions of the rules as to alternative prayer, it seems probable that the same conclusion would still be arrived at, on the ground that the claims were inconsistent and embarrassing.

v. Rescission on the ground of fraud or mistake.

Deceived party may rescind.

§ 1059. Either party to a contract who has been led into it by fraud may rescind the contract:² and either party to a contract who by the fraud of the other party has been prevented from obtaining the full benefit of it may rescind the contract.³ This right is discussed in the chapter on Fraud.⁴

Mistake and misrepresentation without fraud are also under some circumstances grounds for rescission.⁵

vi. Where one party has refused to perform or unreasonably delayed performance.

Refusal to perform.

§ 1060. Where one party to a contract absolutely refuses to perform his part of the contract when the hour for performance has arrived,⁶ the other party may accept that refusal and thereupon rescind the contract. So that where a man contracted to buy straw to be delivered by instalments, and to pay on delivery, and after a time refused to pay for the last load delivered, and insisted on always keeping one payment in arrear, the other party was held entitled to rescind the contract.¹ But to justify rescission for this reason the refusal to perform must not be mere non-performance or neglect in performance: "there must have been something equivalent to saying, 'I rescind this contract'—a total refusal to perform it, or something equivalent to that which would enable the plaintiff on his side to say, 'If you rescind the contract on your part, I will rescind it on mine.'"²

§ 1061. The true question is that laid down in the case of Freeth v. Burr,³ viz., whether the acts and conduct of the party (including no doubt the words as part of the conduct) evince an intention no longer to be bound by the contract. The answer in every case is an inference from the facts. On this principle, that the refusal must be absolute, it was held, in a case where a defendant to a specific performance action stated by the defence that he was unwilling to complete, that the plaintiff was not at liberty at the hearing, at which the defendant did not appear, to ask for an immediate judgment for rescission and repayment of the deposit.⁴

absolute.

§ 1062. The cases go yet a step further, and show that even before the time for performance has come there may be a breach by anticipation by reason of a wrongful repudiation before the time of performance.⁵

§ 1064. Again, where the contract is for the sale of a thing, and the only thing which the vendor can convey is different from the thing contracted for in an essential particular, the purchaser may treat this as a non-performance by the vendor which gives a right to rescind; and he may in some cases do this, as we have already seen, even when a clause for compensation exists in the contract.²

Delay.

§ 1065. The right to rescind which arises from unreasonable delay in performance will be considered in the next chapter.³

vii. Where one party has made performance impossible.

Election
of other party.

§ 1066. It is a clear principle of law that if by any act of one of the parties the performance of a contract be rendered impossible, the other party may, at his election, rescind the contract:⁴ so that where A. contracted with B. to supply B. with a chariot for five years, which A. was to repair, and before the five years had expired A. made over the chariot to his successor in trade, and thereby disabled himself from performing the unperformed part of the contract, B. was held at liberty to rescind it.⁵ Similarly it seems clear that a contract to convey an estate may be rescinded if the vendor convey the estate to a third person:⁶ that a contract to pay in goods may be rescinded if the payer part with the goods:⁷ that a contract to write an essay

for a particular series may be rescinded if the publisher finally abandon the series:¹ that a contract to accept and pay for a telegraph cable on the certificate of an engineer may be rescinded if the party to deliver the cable bribe the engineer.²

§ 1067. The impossibility must, it seems, arise in respect of some substantial or essential part of the contract;³ though it is not perhaps clear on principle why a contracting party who disables himself from performing modo et formâ should be at liberty to allege that the incapacity which he has produced is in a non-essential particular.

Impossibility must be in a substantial part.

§ 1068. But even though the particular in respect of which the impossibility arises may not be of the essence of the contract, yet if it be brought about by the fraudulent misconduct of the defendant, the plaintiff's right to rescind is clear in Equity. Thus where Company A. contracted with Company B. to lay a telegraph cable for Company B., and then bribed the engineer for whose services in certifying as to the work the contract provided, Mellish L.J. held that even if the certificate of the engineer could not be considered so much of the essence of the contract that the plaintiff would at Common Law have been entitled to rescind, yet that the fraudulent misconduct of the defendant company having made it impossible that the plaintiff company could have the full benefit of the contract, they were at liberty to rescind.⁴

Impossibility produced by fraud.

OF THE LAPSE OF TIME.

§ 1071. THE lapse of time before application to the Court for its interference to enforce an uncompleted contract, or the fact that the plaintiff has not performed his part of the contract at the time specified, may furnish grounds of defence to an action for specific performance.

PART III.
Ch. xxv.

Nature
of the defence.

§ 1072. Before the Judicature Acts, the plaintiff in a Common Law Court had to show that all things on his part to be performed had been performed within a reasonable time, or, where a time was specified in the contract, within the time so specified: and at Common Law time was thus always of the essence of the contract.¹ But in Equity the question of time was differently regarded: for Courts of Equity, discriminating between these formal terms of a contract, a breach of which it would be inequitable in either party to insist on as a bar to the other's rights, and those which were of the substance and essence of the contract,² and applying to contracts the principles which governed the interference of those Courts in relation to mortgages,³ held time to be prima facie non-essential, and accordingly granted specific performance of the contracts after the time for their performance had been suffered to pass by the party asking for the intervention of the Court, if the other party had not shown a determination not to proceed.¹ “When,” said Leach V.C., “a Court of Equity holds that time is not of the essence of a contract, it proceeds upon the principle that, having regard to the nature of the subject, time is immaterial to the value, and is urged only by way of pretence and evasion.”²

Time formerly differently regarded at Law and in Equity.

Provision of the Ju-dicature Acts as to
time.

§ 1073. Now, however, stipulations in contracts as to time or otherwise, which would not, before the date of the commencement of the Judicature Act, 1873, have been decreed to be or to have become of the essence of such contracts in a Court of Equity, receive in all Courts the same construction and effect as they would formerly have received in Equity.³ In other words, the doctrines and rules of Equity as to the effect of lapse of time are now applicable to and govern every contract that falls within the jurisdiction of any of the Courts, superior or inferior,⁴ of this country. So that, for instance, whilst before the Judicature Act the times fixed by a contract for payment and completion were, according to law, of the essence of the contract, so that non-payment by the default of the purchaser on the day fixed authorized the vendor to treat the contract as rescinded,—since the Judicature Act the purchaser has a reasonable time after the stipulated day within which to pay before the vendor can rescind.⁵

PART III.
Ch. XXV.

§ 1074. It is proposed to discuss the subject in hand under the following heads; viz.:—

Division
of the subject.

(i) Cases where time was originally of the essence of the contract:

(ii) Cases where time, though not originally of the essence of the contract, has been engrafted into its essence by subsequent notice:

(iii) Cases where the delay has been so great as to constitute laches disentitling the party to the aid of the Court, and evidencing an abandonment of the contract irrespectively of any particular stipulation as to time:

(iv) Cases where time does not run:

(v) Cases where the objection on the ground of lapse of time is waived.

i. Time originally of the essence of the contract.

§ 1075. Time is originally of the essence of the contract, in the view of a Court of Equity, whenever it appears to have been part of the real intention of the parties that it should be so, and not to have been inserted as a merely formal part of the contract.¹ As this intention may either be separately expressed, or may be implied from the nature or structure of the contract, it follows that time may be originally of the essence of a contract, as to any one or more of its terms, either by virtue of an express condition in the contract itself making it so, or by reason of its being implied. It will be convenient to consider the cases separately; premising, however, that the point that time is of the essence of the contract is one which should be made by the party insisting on it without delay.²

When
time is essence.

PART III.
Ch. XXV.

By express condition.

§ 1076. The Court of Chancery seems at one time to have gone so far in its disregard of time as to consider that it was of no consequence in Equity:¹ and accordingly Lord Thurlow² seems to have maintained that no expression in the contract could make time of the original essence of it. Lord Kenyon M.R., however, maintained the contrary:³ Lord Thurlow's doctrine was doubted by Lord Eldon:⁴ and accordingly express stipulations rendering time of the essence have repeatedly been maintained as valid and binding in Equity,⁵ in respect, for instance, of covenants for the renewal of leases,⁶ and stipulations as to the time for payment of the deposit⁷ or the balance of the purchase-money.⁸

Condition
must be clear.

§ 1077. In order to render time thus essential, it must be clearly and expressly stipulated, and must also have been really contemplated and intended by the parties that it shall be so: it is not enough that a time is merely mentioned during which or before which something shall be done.

Instances.

§ 1078. Therefore in a case where the contract, dated the 23rd of October, was to grant a new lease "upon condition" of the intending lessee paying on or before the end of the month a premium of 1000 guineas, Lord Eldon nevertheless refused (on an interlocutory application) to treat the period limited by the contract as essential, considering that, upon the facts of the case, the amount of the premium was really the only thing contemplated by the parties, and that there was nothing to show that payment at a particular day was the object.¹

PART III.
Ch. XXV.

So, again, where a day was specified for the delivery of the abstract, it was held non-essential, although the purchaser upon its expiration immediately refused to proceed :² and in Parkin v. Thorold,³ where a day had been specified for the completion of the contract, Lord Romilly M.R. held it to be non-essential, though in so doing he differed from the previous observations of Lord Cranworth, made (when V.C.) in the same case at an earlier stage.⁴ Lapse of time in payment of the purchase-money may generally be recompensed by interest and costs.⁵

§ 1079. Time may be implied as essential in a contract, from the nature of the subject-matter with which the parties are dealing. “If, therefore,” said Alderson B.,⁶ “the thing sold be of greater or less value according to the effluxion of time, it is manifest that time is of the essence of the contract: and a stipulation as to time must then be literally complied with in Equity as well as in Law.” In respect of reversionary interests, therefore, it is held to be of the essence of justice, that contracts for sale should be executed immediately and without any delay,⁷ unless indeed the terms of the contract are such as to show that the parties contemplated the possible occurrence of a delay, and intended, in the event of that delay occurring, to keep the bargain alive.⁸

PART III.
Ch. XXV.Subject-matter daily varying.

§ 1080. So, again, where the subject-matter is from its nature exposed to daily variation, the Court inclines to hold time to be material, as in the sale of the stock in a public-house,¹ in contracts for granting annuities on lives,² and in purchases of government stock.³

Commercial enterprise.

§ 1081. And so, again, where the object of the contract is a commercial enterprise, the Court is strongly inclined to hold time to be essential, whether the contract be for the purchase of land for such purposes, or more directly for the prosecution of trade.⁴ This principle has been acted on in the matter of a contract respecting land which had been purchased for the erection of mills,⁵ and in several cases of contracts for the sale of public-houses as going concerns.⁶ For the purchaser of a public-house presumably buys it for the purpose of carrying it on, and it would be ruinous to him if he were kept out of it.⁷

Mines.

§ 1082. The same principle applies with especial force to contracts relating to mines. The nature of all mining transactions is such as to render time essential: for no science, foresight, or examination can afford a sure guarantee against sudden losses, disappointments, and reverses, and a person claiming an interest in such undertakings ought therefore to show himself in good time willing to partake in the possible loss as well as profit.⁸ So in several cases time has § 1083. Again, where the contract had relation to the supply of coal, and eleven months were allowed to elapse before filing the bill, the article being one fluctuating from day to day in its market price, the Court held the delay a ground for declining its interference:² and where the contract contemplated the payment of moneys to be applied towards obtaining patents, time was from the nature of the object in view held to be of the essence.³

Coal.

Patents.

§ 1084. So, again, where a contract specified a time by which calls were to be paid up, or in default the shares were to be forfeited;⁴ and where a contract gave an option to be exercised before a certain time to convert loan notes into shares:⁵ in both these cases time was from the nature of the subject-matter of the contract held to be essential.

Shares.

§ 1085. The case of *Macbryde v. Weekes*⁶ is a strong illustration of this principle; for there the plaintiff by the contract undertook to purchase a field adjoining his own, to procure an assignment of a term, and to do other things which usually require time: but the nature of the subject-matter of the contract, which was a colliery, was held to make time of the essence of the contract, to the extent of rendering it incumbent on the vendor to use his utmost diligence in completing the contract, and giving the purchaser a right to decline completing, if the vendor failed in so exerting himself. In this case the purchaser, after little more than two months had elapsed from the date of the contract, gave the vendor notice that, unless he completed it within another month, the purchaser would rescind, and the time so limited by the purchaser was held to be, under the circumstances, reasonable.

Surrounding cir-cumstances.

§ 1086. The essentiality of time may also be implied from the surrounding circumstances connected in each case with the particular contract.¹ Thus where a man purchasing a house with the object of immediately occupying it as his own residence stipulated in the contract that possession should be given on a specified day, and the vendor failed to show a good title by that day, it was held that the stipulation as to time was of the essence of the contract,² and the vendor, though he offered actual possession, failed to enforce specific performance.³ Possession in such a contract means possession with a complete title previously shown.⁴

Condition showing time not
of the essence.

§ 1087. The later case of *Webb v. Hughes*⁵ is not at variance with this principle, but illustrates a limitation of it. There, too, the house and land, the subject-matter of the contract, were required by the purchaser for immediate residential occupation, but the conditions of sale, after naming a day for completion, went on to provide that if, from any cause whatever, the purchase should not then be completed, the purchaser should pay interest on the unpaid purchase-money from that day until the actual completion of the purchase; and it was accordingly held that, inasmuch as parties to the contract evidently contemplated the possibility of the completion being postponed beyond the day named, time was not of the essence. The ratio decidendi of this case is obviously applicable whatever the nature of the subject-matter of the contract, and it has accordingly been applied even to the sale of a reversionary interest.¹

§ 1088. Again, where the members of a company in general meeting agreed to certain conditions on which dissenting members should be allowed to retire from the company, and one of those conditions fixed a date by which the option to retire was to be declared, the House of Lords held that that date was so essential a part of the arrangement, that the directors had no power to allow any member to retire who had not declared his option within the limited time.²

Option of retirement from company.

§ 1089. Where hardship would result from considering time immaterial, as where delay in completion would involve one of the parties in a serious liability or loss, the Court will incline to consider time as being of the essence. Thus where a tenant without any definite interest, agreed for the sale of his goodwill and business to a purchaser to be completed on the 25th of March, that day was considered essential, inasmuch as if the contract were not then completed, the vendor might render himself liable as tenant for the ensuing year.³ And so, again, where the body to participate in the purchase-money, being a chapter, was liable to variation, non-payment of the consideration money at the specified time was held fatal to the subsistence of the contract.⁴

PART III.
Ch. XXV.Time in some respects of the essence.

§ 1090. Where the vendor stipulates that time shall be of the essence in respect of some of the conditions in his favour, the Court inclines to hold it essential in respect of others also against him. Vendors so stipulating for the essentiality of time in their favour, "cannot fairly," said Knight Bruce V.C., "complain of being held strictly to the conditions themselves. . . . The plaintiffs' proposition is that the purchaser shall be held by a cable, and the vendors by a skein of silk."¹ Accordingly where it was, by one clause of the contract, provided that the vendors should deliver the abstract to the purchaser within twenty-one days from the date of the contract, and, by another clause, that the purchaser should send in his requisitions within twenty-eight days from the delivery of the abstract, and in this respect time should be of the essence of the contract; and the vendors did not deliver the abstract until more than two months after the date of the contract; the Court refused to hold the purchaser bound to comply with the stipulation as to the time for sending in requisitions, holding that, in such a case, the time for taking the objections, and the mode in which they are to be considered as waived, should depend upon the general principles of the Court.²

Where the
contract is unilateral.

§ 1091. Where the contract contains stipulations in favour of one party and not of the other,—as, for instance, an option,—or is in anywise unilateral, the Court, if it does not consider time as originally of the essence, will, as we shall hereafter see, look at it with more than usual strictness.³

ii. *Time made essential by notice.*PART III.
Ch. XXV.

§ 1092. Where time was not originally of the essence of the contract, but one party has been guilty of gross, vexatious, unreasonable, or unnecessary delay or default in relation to it, the other party becomes entitled to limit a reasonable time within which the contract shall be perfected by the other; and in default of obedience to such notice the Court will not enforce specific performance, but will leave the parties to their strictly legal rights.¹ It is to be observed that it is only when such delay or default has happened that this right occurs. There is no general right in either party to limit a time.

When
time may be engrafted.

§ 1093. This beneficial principle is of comparatively recent introduction. In a case before Leach V.C. in 1821, he did not consider it to be then decided that time could thus be made essential by subsequent notice;² and where clear notice had been given that a purchaser would insist on completion by the time specified, Lord Erskine had previously refused to consider time as of moment in the contract.³ But the principle is now well established.

Introduction of the principle.

§ 1094. It is not, of course, possible for either party arbitrarily and suddenly to put an end to negotiations as to title,⁴ or other matters pending between the parties. The time specified by the notice must be reasonable, i.e., long enough for the proper doing of the things required to be done:⁵ if it be not so (and the question of reasonableness must be determined as at the date when the notice is given⁶), the notice will fail in engrafting time into the essence of the contract. Thus, in one case, six weeks, being a less time than the vendor took to furnish the abstract, were held to be an unreasonably short time for the vendor to insist on the purchaser's completing, and the notice was therefore inoperative;¹ in another case, fourteen days were held not to be a reasonable time within which to require the plaintiffs to produce a deed and complete the title;² and, in another, where, after negotiations as to the title had been going on for upwards of three years, the purchaser gave notice that, unless a good and marketable title were shown and made out within five weeks he would treat the contract as at an end, the notice was held unreasonable and bad.³ And again when the objection is one of conveyance and not of title, and the date for the completion of the contract is not of the essence, the proper course for the purchaser to pursue where the vendor has made default at the day, is to give him a notice to complete within a reasonable time, and that in default the contract will be rescinded.⁴

refusal to remove objection.

§ 1095. But where a vendor has previously refused to remove an objection, a time which would be unreasonably short in the first instance for the removal of it may then become a reasonable period, after which the purchaser may treat the contract as rescinded.⁵

Conditional waiver of notice.

§ 1096. Again, where a notice to rescind was waived in case evidence requisite to prove the title was produced immediately, the evidence not having been produced, the bill was dismissed.⁶

expedition obligatory, may make reasonable a notice which would otherwise be too short. Thus, where A. agreed to grant B. a mining lease, and for that purpose undertook to buy a field adjoining his own, to procure an assignment of a term, and do other acts requiring time, and nine weeks elapsed from the contract without any communication from A. to B. to show when the contract was likely to be completed, and B. then gave A. notice to complete within one calendar month, and in default to rescind the contract; it was held that the nature of the subject-matter of the contract rendered expedition on the part of the lessor essential, and that the month's notice was reasonable.¹

§ 1098. The notice to engraft time into the contract must be distinct, and unequivocal: thus, a notice that one party would consider the non-performance by a certain day as equivalent to a refusal to perform, was held not to amount to a notice that the contract would then be considered as rescinded.² The notice should, for certainty, be confined to the next act to be done by the party to whom it is given.

What notice requisite.

§ 1099. It does not appear to be necessary that the notice should be in writing: for this purpose statements made by the purchaser's agent at the time of signing the contract, to the effect that time was essential, were in one case admitted as evidence.³

Where parol notice sufficient.

iii. Lapse of time constituting laches or evidencing abandonment of contract.

§ 1100. The Court of Chancery was at one time inclined to neglect all consideration of time in the specific performance of contracts for sale, not only as an original ingredient in them, but as affecting them by way of laches.¹ But it is now clearly established, that the delay of either party² in not performing its terms on his part, or in not prosecuting his right to the interference of the Court by the institution of an action, or, lastly, in not diligently prosecuting his action, when instituted,³ may constitute such laches as will disentitle him to the aid of the Court, and so amount, for the purpose of specific performance, to an abandonment on his part of the contract.

Mackreth
v. Marlar.

§ 1101. One of the earliest cases tending to establish this principle was *Mackreth v. Marlar*⁴ before Lord Kenyon M.R.: Lord Loughborough followed it, and held in one case where a vendor delivered no abstract on or before the day for completion, nor till after an action for the deposit, and the purchaser had demanded back his deposit at the date for completion, that there was evidence of an abandonment of the contract by the vendor.⁵ These cases were approved by Lord Alvanley M.R.;⁶ and finally the doctrine in question was adopted and acted on by Lord Eldon: thus, for example, in one instance he on this ground discharged a purchaser under a decree, error having been shown in the decree, though the parties were proceeding to rectify it.⁷

Laches
a bar to relief.

§ 1102. The doctrine of the Court thus established, therefore, is that laches on the part of the plaintiff (whether vendor or purchaser), either in executing his part of the contract or in applying to the Court, will debar him from relief. "A party cannot call upon a Court of Equity for specific performance," said Lord Alvanley M.R.,¹ “unless he has shown himself ready, desirous, prompt, and eager;” or, to use the language of Lord Cranworth,² “specific performance is relief which this Court will not give, unless in cases where the parties seeking it come promptly, and as soon as the nature of the case will permit.”³

PART III.
Ch. xxv.

§ 1103. Where the contract is in anywise unilateral, as, for instance, in the case of an option to purchase, a right of renewal, or of any other condition in favour of one party and not of the other, then any delay in the party in whose favour the contract is binding is looked at with especial strictness.⁴ On this principle, the delay of a purchaser in deciding whether he will or will not accept the title is an injustice, because the purchaser can enforce the contract against the vendor whether the title be good or bad, whereas the vendor can only do so in case of a good title.⁵

Contract not mutual.

§ 1104. So where a railway company agreed to make such crossings as the landowner's surveyor should within one month direct, and notify in writing to the company or their engineer, and the surveyor did not give any such direction or notification until after the expiration of the stipulated time, it was held that the landowner's right to have the crossings made under the contract was lost.⁶

Ch. XXV.Option to have lease.

§ 1105. But where no time has been originally limited within which a tenant's option to have a lease must be exercised, and the landlord has never called upon the tenant to declare his option, mere lapse of time will not preclude the tenant¹ or his assign² or legal personal representative³ from exercising it.

Acquiescence.

§ 1106. Acquiescence in the breach of a covenant will form a bar to its specific performance in Equity.⁴

What
delay sufficient.

§ 1107. In many of the cases there has been a general dilatoriness in all the proceedings, so that it is almost impossible to state briefly the actual amount of delay which has been considered to bar the plaintiff's right to relief: but some notion of the present doctrine of the Court on this point will be gained from the following cases.

Instances.

§ 1108. In the old case of The Marquis of Hertford v. Boore,⁵ a delay of fourteen months was not considered a bar to the plaintiff's bill. But in the comparatively recent case of *Eads v. Williams*⁶ (where the contract was for a lease of a coal mine), a delay of three and a half years was considered fatal: in Southcomb v. The Bishop of Exeter,⁷ a delay from the 17th of January, 1842, to the 30th of August, 1843, was held to have the same effect: and in Lord James Stuart v. The London and North-Western Railway Co.,⁸ Knight Bruce L.J. seemed to think that a delay from October, 1848, to July, 1850, must be fatal to such a bill.

escence in this by the other party, by a comparatively brief delay in enforcing his right, will be a bar: so that in one case¹ two years' delay in filing a bill after such notice, in another case² one year's, and in a third³ (where the contract was for a lease of collieries) five months' like delay were held to exclude the intervention of the Court.

iv. Where time does not run.

§ 1110. Where the contract is substantially executed, and the plaintiff is in possession of the property, and has got the equitable estate, so that the object of his action is only to clothe himself with the legal estate, time either will not run at all as laches to debar the plaintiff from his right, or it will be looked at less narrowly by the Court;⁴ for the plaintiff has not been sleeping on his rights, but relying on his equitable title, without thinking it necessary to have his legal right perfected.⁵

§ 1111. Therefore, where a tenant holds under a contract for a lease, pays his rent, and has possession of the property and the enjoyment of all the benefits given him by the contract, the effluxion of time will not be a ground for resisting its enforcement:⁶ and so, where there was a contract for the lease of a shop and the sale of the stock, and the stock had been paid for, the plaintiff had been put into possession as lessee, and the rent had been paid,—in fact, everything had been done but the execution of the lease, which the defendant had refused to execute on a ground which was untenable,—specific performance of the lease was granted, notwithstanding considerable laches on the part of the plaintiff subsequent to the defendant's refusal, but therefore without costs.¹

Possession must be under the contract.

§ 1112. But possession, to save a purchaser from the usual consequence of delay, must be possession under the contract sought to be enforced, and the vendor must have known or have been bound to know that the purchaser claimed to be in possession under the contract. Accordingly in a case where the tenant of a tavern, with an option of purchasing it during his term, duly gave notice that he elected to purchase, but after some correspondence allowed the subject to drop, and then for upwards of five years remained in possession without ever insisting on the effectuation of the purchase, and from time to time making payments to the lessor's mortgagee for most of which he took receipts expressing them to be for rent, it was held by the Court of Appeal that his possession had not been such as to prevent his delay being fatal to his claim for specific performance.²

Pending negotiation.

§ 1113. Nor will time run as laches pending a negotiation between the parties to the contract, even though it may be carried on without prejudice to a notice given by one party that he holds the contract rescinded.³ But where the negotiation is about a point which is not the real cause of the delay, its pendency will not prevent the effluxion of time operating as laches: so where there were two purchases, and disputes arose about the title and a valuation incident to the purchase, but from the evidence it appeared that want of means in the purchaser who had instituted the suit, and not these disputes, was the real cause of delay, Knight Bruce V.C., though after some hesitation, refused specific performance, as the plaintiff in such suits must have more than a doubtful title.¹

PART III.
Ch. XXV.

§ 1114. When the delay arises from an untenable objection taken by one party, that party cannot avail himself of the delay caused by it, as a ground for the non-performance of the contract.² And generally, whenever the delay is attributable to the defendant, he will not be allowed to avail himself of it as a defence.³

Delay arising from party objecting.

§ 1115. In *Lamare v. Dixon*⁴ an intending lessee, relying on a verbal promise by the owner of some wine vaults that they should be made dry, signed a written contract to accept a lease of the vaults at a specified rent, and went into possession. The vaults not being made dry, the tenant constantly complained, and, though he paid rent, always paid it under protest; until, finally, after having actually occupied the vaults for upwards of two years, he refused to take the lease on the ground that the owner's promise had never been fulfilled. The House of Lords held that the tenant's payments were referable merely to his actual use and occupation of the premises, that such payments and possession did not amount to such acquiescence as to debar the tenant from defending his refusal on the ground of the non-performance of the promise which had been the inducement to the contract, and that the owner's delay and conduct in the matter generally disentitled him to insist on specific performance of the contract; but the House considered the delay which had occurred so chargeable to both parties that the bill, though dismissed, was dismissed without costs.

Leaving deposit.

§ 1116. The fact that the purchaser has allowed the deposit to remain in the hands of the vendor from the time when the former rescinded the contract until the filing of the bill, has been decided not to affect the question of laches.¹

Continuing in possession.

§ 1117. So also continuing in possession, if under an arrangement to that effect, will not affect the question.²

Land taken under Railway
Act.

§ 1118. In a case already referred to Lord Romilly M.R. expressed the opinion that time does not run as laches in the case of land taken under a Railway Act, until the time during which the company had the power to make the railway ceased, as the fact whether the company would require the land or not could not be ascertained until that time;³ but this view was not adopted by Knight Bruce and Lord Cranworth L.JJ., who seem to have thought that time would run from the date of the contract.

Mere
claim.

§ 1119. It is to be observed that a mere claim or protest by words or letters, though continual, unaccompanied by any act to give effect to them, will not prevent time operating as laches against the party making the claim, nor keep alive a right which would otherwise be precluded.⁴

v. Waiver of delay.

Waiver by conduct.

§ 1120. Objections grounded on the lapse of time are waived by a course of conduct inconsistent with the intention of insisting on such an objection: and in this respect it is immaterial whether time were originally of the essence or subsequently engrafted on the contract.¹

§ 1121. Therefore, where a title is in a state which may cause delay, or a good title has not been completely shown by the day for completion, and the purchaser goes on dealing about the title after that day, this will waive his right to insist on the time.² So the examination of the abstract after the time will prevent a defendant insisting on time as essential, for he had no right to look into the abstract if he meant to abandon his purchase.³ And such conduct will amount to a waiver, even though a formal notice to abandon the contract may have been given.⁴ So again, insisting on the contract after the time limited for completion is an act waiving the right to insist on that time as essential.⁵ But where a purchaser protests against delay, and then under protest deals about the title, this will not, it seems, amount to a waiver.⁶

§ 1122. As a general principle, a stipulation as to time cannot be bindingly waived otherwise than by an intentional act, done with knowledge of all material circumstances. Accordingly in a case already cited, where a railway company agreed to do certain works to be directed by the award of a surveyor, to be made within a specified time, and the award was not made within that time, the company were held not to have waived the condition as to time by having, in ignorance of the fact that the award was made late, taken it up and paid the surveyor's charges for it.⁷

Ch. xxv.As to time for payment.

§ 1123. Again as to time for payment: where an assignor of a lease insisted on a forfeiture of the assignment by reason of non-payment of part of the purchase-money at the time stipulated, he was held to have waived it by getting the assignee to pay the rent to the superior landlord, that not being consistent with the notion that the agreement was at an end.¹ In another case there was a contract that if the residue of the purchase-money was not paid at a certain day, the contract should be void: it was not paid, but the vendor, allowing the purchaser to retain possession and taking from him a warrant of attorney to confess judgment in ejectment, was held to have waived the condition.²

As to time for delivery of objections.

§ 1124. As to the time for the delivery of objections, a subsequent correspondence as to title was in one case held to work a waiver:³ and a similar result was in another case held to follow from the subsequent renewal of negotiation as to price.⁴

Possession.

§ 1125. So, again, taking possession after the default as to time may, it seems, preclude the objection:⁵ but merely giving possession before the day for payment has arrived is no waiver of a vendor's right to insist upon payment on that day.⁶

Extension of time.

§ 1126. The mere extension or giving of time, where time is of the essence of the contract, is only a waiver to the extent of substituting the extended time for the original time, and not an utter destruction of the essentiality of the time. And so where, by the terms of a contract for the sale of the benefit of a building contract, a moiety of the price was to be paid on a specified day, and the vendors afterwards by letter gave the purchaser until a later (named) day to make the payment, but the money was not paid by that day, Jessel M.R. held that time was originally of the essence of the contract, and the letter only a qualified and conditional waiver of the original stipulation; and that, consequently, the vendors were entitled to treat the contract as at an end.¹

PART III.
Ch. xxv.

§ 1127. It is perhaps scarcely needful to remark, that a waiver as to the time in which an act is to be done is not necessarily in any degree a waiver of the act itself. So that where it was agreed that A. should repair some warehouses by the 1st of April, and that B. should then take a lease of them, and the repairs were not done by the day appointed, but B. continued to deal in a way which was held to amount to a waiver of the time as essential (if by the contract it had ever been so), and afterwards and before a lease was executed the warehouses were burnt down: it was held that B., though he had waived the essentiality of time, had not waived the condition that the repairs should be effected prior to his taking a lease, and consequently, that the proposed lessor A., and not the proposed lessee B., must bear the loss.²

time of an act no waiver of the act.

§ 1128. The question whether time was originally of the essence, and whether it has since been waived, is one of evidence, and can therefore be disposed of only at the trial.³

PART IV.

OF THE MODE OF EXERCISING THE JURISDICTION.

CHAPTER I.

OF THE INSTITUTION OF THE PROCEEDINGS.

PART IV.
Ch. i.
The former practice.

§ 1129. At the time when the Judicature Act, 1873, came into operation, the usual mode of proceeding in order to obtain the specific performance of a contract was to institute a suit for the purpose by bill of complaint in the Court of Chancery.

Judicature Act, 1873, s. 34.

§ 1130. By the 34th section of the Judicature Act, 1873, all causes and matters for the specific performance of contracts between vendors and purchasers of real estates, including contracts for leases, are specially assigned (subject to the Rules of the Supreme Court¹) to the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice.

Limited operation of the 34th section.

§ 1131. Causes or matters for the specific performance of other contracts are not expressly assigned to any particular Division of the High Court, and may accordingly, it would seem, be instituted, at the plaintiff's option, in any Division, subject to the powers of transfer exercisable under the Judicature Acts and the Rules of Court.²

Form of statement of claim.

§ 1132. A form of statement of claim in an action for the specific performance of a contract for the sale of land is given in Appendix C., § ii., No 12 to the Rules of Court.¹

PART IV.
Ch. i.

§ 1133. It is provided by the Acts and Rules² that any action may be transferred from one Division of the Court to another. Accordingly where, in an action for the recovery of land commenced in the Exchequer Division the defendant set up a counter-claim for specific performance of a contract for a lease of the land to himself, and it appeared that there was a prima facie case for specific performance, the action was transferred, on the defendant's application and against the plaintiff's will, to the Chancery Division.³ And a similar order was affirmed by the Court of Appeal in the case of Holloway v. York,⁴ where, the liquidation-trustee of a person who had contracted to purchase real estate having commenced an action in the Exchequer Division against the vendor for a return of the deposit, the vendor had delivered a counter-claim for specific performance of the contract.

Transfer of action.

§ 1134. The machinery of the Chancery Division is more adapted to suits for specific performance than that of the Queen's Bench Division; and hence it seems that where there is an action in that Division for the deposit and a bonâ fide counter-claim for specific performance the cause ought usually to be transferred to the Chancery Division.⁵ But the mere fact that defendant sued in the Queen's Bench Division sets up a counter-claim for the specific performance of some contract relating to land between himself and the plaintiff will not entitle him to get the cause transferred to the Chancery Division.⁶ The Court will take notice of an equitable right to specific performance appearing incidentally in the course of an ejectment action, though there be no counter-claim for such performance.¹

§ 1135. The determination by the Court of questions of law between vendors and purchasers of real or leasehold estate, and judicial declarations as to their respective rights under the contract of sale, may, it is conceived, be obtained upon a special case stated in the action.² The Court of Chancery could not enforce specific performance in a proceeding of this nature;³ but under the present practice, where the answers to the special case dispose of the action, they may be turned into a judgment making declarations to the same effect.⁴

§ 1136. A convenient mode of obtaining an authoritative decision of questions arising upon some of the class of contracts discussed in this treatise has been introduced by the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, under which (section 9) a vendor or purchaser of real or leasehold estate or their respective representatives may at any time apply in a summary way to a Judge of the High Court in Chambers in respect of any requisitions or objections or any claim for compensation or any other question arising out of or connected with the contract (not being a question affecting the existence or validity of the contract), and the Judge is to make such order upon the application as to him shall appear just, and to order how and by whom all or any of the costs of and incident to the application are to be borne and paid. The exception of questions affecting the existence or validity of the contract refers to the existence or validity of the contract in its inception, and does not preclude the Court from determining whether a power to rescind contained in the contract has been well exercised.¹ In very many of the disputes that arise between vendors and purchasers of realty and leaseholds an application under this section is an advantageous and efficient substitute for an action for specific performance.² The parties to such an application are in the same position as they would be under a reference as to title in such an action.³

PART IV.

§ 1137. The jurisdiction to make such order as shall be just, conferred by this statute, enables the Court to do all that may be just as the natural consequence of the point or points decided. Therefore, when the Court on a summons decided that the vendor had not shown a good title, it ordered the vendor to return the deposit with interest, and to pay the purchaser his costs of investigating the title.⁴

quential
relief.

§ 1138. But where the purchaser seeks to recover back the deposit on the ground of fraud or of such misdescription as enables the purchaser to rescind, there the matter in controversy affects the validity of the contract, and consequently it cannot be determined under the statute in question.⁵

The County Courts
Act, 1888.

§ 1140. By the County Courts Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 43), s. 67, County Courts have all the powers and authority of the High Court in actions for specific performance of any agreement for the sale, purchase, or lease of any property, where in the case of a sale or purchase the purchase-money, or in the case of a lease the value of the property, does not exceed 500*l*.

tion.

§ 1141. The jurisdiction of the High Court in cases of specific performance has not been ousted by that conferred upon County Courts. Though the matter may be within the jurisdiction of the inferior Court, a plaintiff is at liberty to bring his action in the High Court (subject, of course, to the statutory provisions as to transfer).

Land Transfer
Act, 1875,
s. 93.

§ 1142. It may here be mentioned that by the Land Transfer Act, 1875, it has been enacted that (s. 93) where a suit is instituted for the specific performance of a contract relating to registered land, or a registered charge, the Court having cognizance of such suit may by summons, or by such other mode as it deems expedient, cause all or any parties who have registered estates or rights in such land or charge, or have entered up notices, cautions or inhibitions against the same, to appear in such suit, and show cause why such contract should not be specifically performed, and the Court may direct that any order made by the Court in such suit shall be binding on such parties or any of them. Further, by the 94th section of the same Act, all costs incurred by any party so appearing in a suit to enforce against a vendor specific performance of his contract to sell registered land or a registered charge are to be taxed as between solicitor and client, and, unless the Court otherwise orders, paid by such vendor.

PART IV.
Ch. i.

§ 1143. How far the summary jurisdiction conferred by the 35th section of the Companies Act, 1862, is properly applicable to the enforcement of contracts for the sale and purchase of shares is a question which has been much discussed, but can hardly be said to be even now satisfactorily settled. That section provides that if the name of any person is without sufficient cause entered in or omitted from the register of members of a company under the Act, or if default is made or unnecessary delay takes place in entering on the register the fact of any person having ceased to be a member of the company, the person or member aggrieved may apply by motion or summons for an order of the Court that the register may be rectified, "and the Court may either refuse such application, with or without costs to be paid by the applicant, or it may, if satisfied of the justice of the case, make an order for the rectification of the register, and may direct the company to pay all the costs of such motion, application, or petition, and any damages the party aggrieved may have sustained. The Court may, in any proceeding under this section, decide on any question relating to the title of any person who is a party to such proceeding to have his name entered in or omitted from the register, whether such question arises between two or more members or alleged members or between any members or alleged members and the company, and generally the Court may in any such proceeding decide any question that it may be necessary or expedient to decide for the rectification of the register."

Companies
Act, 1862,
s. 35.

§ 1144. This enactment may seem at first sight to offer an attractive and efficient substitute for an action for specific performance in cases arising out of contracts for the sale of shares, but the decisions upon it show that its applicability in practice to such cases is by no means universal. The jurisdiction which it confers is clearly discretionary; and, whatever the effect of the limited power which it gives the Court over costs upon the generality of its subsequent language,¹ it seems that the Court will at any rate be slow to exercise this jurisdiction for the purpose of deciding questions between vendors and purchasers of shares, except where the legal title of the applicant is clear.²

tion to

CHAPTER II.

OF INJUNCTIONS.

§ 1145. It has already been in effect stated¹ that executed, as distinguished from executory, contracts are not within the scope of this treatise. The present chapter will accordingly be confined to the consideration of the use of injunctions in connection with contracts of the latter kind.

PART IV.
Ch. ii.

Subject
of the chapter.

§ 1146. The jurisdiction of the Court in injunction is connected with the specific performance of executory contracts in three ways:—

How injunction is connected with specific performance.

(i.) Sometimes the injunction is the instrument by which the Court specifically enforces the contract itself or some part of it;

(ii.) Sometimes the injunction is merely incident or ancillary to the performance of the contract; and

(iii.) Sometimes the injunction is used for the purpose of giving effect to rights resulting from the non-performance of the contract.

i. Injunction the instrument of performance.

§ 1147. It is evident that whenever the Court grants an injunction restraining the breach of any express or implied term of a contract it thereby pro tanto specifically enforces the performance of the contract.²

Effect of restrain-ing breach of a term.

² As to injunctions restraining applications to Parliament, see infra, Part VI., chap. x.; and, as to the discretionary character of the jurisdiction, see per Lord Westbury in Low v. Innes, 4 De G. J. & S. at p. 290.

PART IV.
Ch. ii.Contract containing express negative
terms.

§ 1148. Where the contract contains express negative as well as positive terms, and the positive terms are capable of specific performance by the Court, the Court may and naturally will enforce by injunction the observance of the negative terms; for by so doing it promotes the complete performance of the contract as a whole.

*Rankin v.
Huskisson.*

§ 1149. Thus where the Commissioners of Woods and Forests contracted with a Committee of the United Service Club for the grant by the Commissioners to the trustees of the club of a lease of a specified piece of ground, and further that a specified plot on the south side of this piece of ground should be laid out as an ornamental garden, and no buildings whatever should be erected thereon, and afterwards the Commissioners began to build stables on the plot; the Court specifically enforced the observance of the negative stipulation by restraining the Commissioners from continuing to build on the plot and also from permitting such part of the stables as had already been built to remain upon it.¹

contract incapable of performance.

§ 1150. But where part of the contract is of such a nature as to be incapable of specific performance by the Court, a difficulty presents itself with respect to the Court's enforcement of any other part of it by injunction.

For, as we have seen,² the Court will not, as a general rule, enforce part of an executory contract unless it can perform the whole; and, in the case supposed, the grant of an injunction would obviously be tantamount to a merely partial enforcement of the contract.

Refusal of Court to interfere.

§ 1151. On the principle referred to in the last preceding section, one would expect to find the Court always refusing to interfere by injunction to restrain

(Shadwell V.C.).

² Part III. chap. xvi.

the breach or non-performance of part of an executory contract where the rest of the contract is incapable of, or is not a proper subject for, specific performance: and in fact there are numerous instances of such refusal.¹

§ 1152. There are, however, cases in which, though the contract as a whole has been such as the Court could not or would not specifically enforce, it has nevertheless granted an injunction restraining the breach of some express or implied term of it. These cases have already been discussed at length in a previous chapter.² It may here be added that whenever in such cases, a person is compelled by injunction to observe some negative term of a contract, the whole benefit of the injunction is conditional upon the plaintiff's performing his part of the contract, and the moment he fails to do any of the acts which he has engaged to do, and which were the consideration for the negative term, the injunction will be liable to be dissolved.³

Breach of express or implied term restrained.

§ 1153. In connection with the cases referred to in the last preceding section, the old case of *Martin v. Nutkin*⁴ may be referred to. There articles were executed between the plaintiffs, who resided very near the church of Hammersmith, and the parson, churchwardens, overseers, and some of the other inhabitants of the parish, by which the plaintiffs covenanted to erect a new cupola, clock, and bell to the church, and the other parties covenanted that a bell which had been daily rung at five o'clock in the morning, to the great annoyance of the plaintiffs, should not be rung during the lives of the plaintiffs or the survivor of them: the plaintiffs performed their part of the contract, but the bell after about two years was rung again: the contract on the part of the parish authorities was specifically enforced against them by means of an injunction; although, as Lord St. Leonards remarked in the course of his judgment in Lumley v. Wagner,¹ the Court clearly could not have granted any specific performance.

ii. Injunction ancillary to performance.

Object and effect of injunction in these cases.

§ 1154. The jurisdiction of the Court in injunction is often ancillary to that in specific performance, for the purpose of preventing the defendant making a use of some legal interest or right vested in him in a way inconsistent with the equity claimed by the plaintiff, or embarrassing the plaintiff by dealing with the property during the pendency of the action, or obstructing the performance of some act incidental to the execution of the contract. "The Court will in many cases interfere and preserve property in statu quo during the pendency of a suit, in which the rights to it are to be decided, and that without expressing, and often without having the means of forming, any opinion as to such rights."²

Granted on prima facie case.

§ 1155. In the class of cases now to be considered the injunction is therefore granted, upon interlocutory application and until the trial, on the plaintiff showing a prima facie case for specific performance.³ It is not necessary that it should be clear that the plaintiff will succeed at the trial: it is sufficient if there is ground for supposing that relief may be given.⁴ For on this application the Court will not decide delicate points, nor allow it to be resisted on points, such as delay, which can only be decided at the trial.²

PART IV.
Ch. ii.

§ 1156. Accordingly, where an intended lessor was sued by an intended lessee for the specific performance of a contract to grant a lease, he was restrained from bringing an ejectment during the suit.³ In another case, the plaintiff (purchaser) obtained an injunction to restrain the vendor from conveying away the legal estate, which might compel the plaintiff to make some other person a party to the suit.⁴ In other cases injunctions to restrain sale and surrender of estates as to which specific performance was sought, were granted on certificate of bill filed and affidavit.⁵ And in another case, an injunction was granted to restrain a purchaser, who had got into possession, from cutting timber on the estate.⁶

Instances of grant of injunctions.

§ 1157. On the same principle, where the contract was for the sale of a leasehold public house at a fixed price, and of the furniture, fixtures, and other effects on the premises, at a valuation to be made by a valuer named in the contract, and the vendor refused to allow the valuer to enter upon the premises for the purpose of making an inventory of the articles to be valued, Jessel M.R., upon the interlocutory application of the purchaser in a suit instituted by him for the specific performance of the contract, made an order compelling the vendor to allow the valuer to enter.⁷ "I have no hesitation," said his Lordship, "in saying that there is no limit to the practice of the Court with regard to interlocutory applications so far as they are necessary and reasonable applications ancillary to the due performance of its functions, namely, the administration of justice at the hearing of the cause.”¹

pendens.*

Balance of convenience.

§ 1158. In one case, where the validity of the contract was disputed, Lord Langdale M.R. refused a motion for an injunction to restrain the vendor from letting or selling the estate pending the hearing, on the ground that a lessee or purchaser pendente lite would take subject to the plaintiff's rights.² And in another case, where, on the plaintiff (purchaser) making his interlocutory application, it was not clear that he would be able at the hearing to establish his right to specific performance, the Court of Appeal refused, on the ground of comparative convenience, to restrain the vendor by injunction until the hearing from selling the property in dispute, it appearing that the grant of the injunction would, if the plaintiff ultimately failed, do more injury to the defendant than its refusal would occasion to the plaintiff should he ultimately be successful.³ Turner L.J., however, in his judgment in the last cited case, distinctly affirmed the general principle that, if there is a clear valid contract for sale, the Court will not permit the vendor afterwards to transfer the legal estate to a third person, although such third person would be affected by lis pendens.⁴

Second
purchase.

§ 1159. It is hardly necessary to remark that the Court will not restrain a person who is under contract to buy an estate from buying another, merely on the ground that the completion of the second purchase may incapacitate him to complete the first.¹

PART IV.
Ch. ii.

§ 1160. The Court will, in some cases, restrain even third persons, whose rights are independent of the contract, from acting in a manner which would prejudice the plaintiff in respect of the property. For instance, where after a contract for the sale of an advowson the incumbent died, and a bill was filed against the vendor and the bishop, the Court restrained the vendor from presenting, and the bishop from instituting, or, in case of a lapse taking place pending the suit, from collating to the living any clerk not nominated by the plaintiff.²

Injunction against third persons.

§ 1161. Other cases in which the Court has restrained by injunction acts inconsistent with the due performance of the contract have been discussed in a previous chapter.³

Acts inconsistent with the
contract.

§ 1162. The Court of Chancery used to grant injunctions to restrain actions at Law for the deposit upon its being paid into Court;⁴ and to restrain actions at Law for damages for delay in completion;⁵ or in which the defence was a contract between the parties which the Court of Law could not specifically enforce;⁶ and it had jurisdiction to restrain parties from applying for probate or the grant of letters of administration, and would so restrain them if it were necessary for the purpose of enforcing a contract which they had entered into.⁷ But whether, in a suit for the specific performance of a contract for a separation deed between husband and wife, it would have been within the province of the Court of Chancery to interfere by injunction to restrain a suit in the Court of Probate for the restitution of conjugal rights, as incident to the main object of the suit in Equity, can hardly be said to have been determined, though it was twice discussed by the House of Lords in the case of Wilson v. Wilson,¹ opposite opinions having been expressed on the point by the learned Lords by whom that case was decided.

The present practice (Judicature Act, 1873, s. 24).

§ 1163. Under the present practice (Judicature Act, 1873, s. 24, sub-s. 5), no cause or proceeding pending before the High Court or the Court of Appeal can be restrained by injunction, but every matter of equity on which an injunction against the prosecution of any such cause or proceeding might, if the Judicature Act, 1873, had not been passed, have been obtained, either unconditionally or on any terms or conditions, may be relied on by way of defence thereto. It is by the same sub-section enacted that nothing in that Act contained shall disable either of the said Courts [the High Court and the Court of Appeal] from directing a stay of proceedings in any cause or matter pending before it if it shall think fit; and that any person, whether a party or not to any such cause or matter, who would have been entitled, if that Act had not been passed, to apply to any Court to restrain the prosecution thereof, shall be at liberty to apply to the said Courts respectively by motion in a summary way for a stay of proceedings in such cause or matter either generally, or so far as may be necessary for the purposes of justice; and that the Court shall thereupon make such order as shall be just.

Effect of the section.

§ 1164. In other words, the defendant to an action who desires to avail himself of some matter which would formerly have been a ground for asking the Court of Chancery to restrain proceedings in another

Court has now two courses only open to him:—he may plead the matter as a defence to the action, or he may make it the ground of an application to the Court in which the action is pending to stay the proceedings in the action.¹

PART IV.
Ch. ii.

The provisions above referred to do not prevent one division of the High Court from granting specific performance of a contract to dismiss proceedings in another division.²

iii. Enforcement of right resulting from non-performance.

§ 1165. The Court will, in a proper case, grant an injunction for the purpose of enforcing a right resulting to the applicant from the non-performance of the contract.

When the Court will interfere.

§ 1166. Thus, where a decree had been made declaring that a contract between a railway company and the rector of W. for the purchase by the company of certain glebe lands of which the company had taken possession before the institution of the suit ought to be specifically performed, and that the plaintiff was entitled to a vendor's lien, and directing the company to pay the purchase-money by a day named, with liberty for the plaintiff, in case of default, to apply for the purpose of enforcing his lien; and, default having been made by the company, an order had been made for the sale of the lands, but two attempts to sell had proved unsuccessful: Lord Selborne finally ordered that, in default of the company paying the purchase-money with interest and costs into Court within a month after service of the order, an injunction should be awarded to restrain them from continuing in possession of the lands.³

Ch. ii.Extent of the High Court's jurisdiction in injunction.

§ 1167. With regard to the extent of the Court's jurisdiction in injunction, it is to be observed that the Judicature Act, 1873, enacts (s. 25, sub-s. 8) that an injunction may be granted by an interlocutory order of the Court in all cases in which it shall appear to the Court to be just or convenient that such order should be made, but does not in terms extend this wide power to the grant of injunctions at the trial. The above enactment must be read in connection with the 76th section of the same Act and the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854 (ss. 79, 81, 82). These provisions give the Court a wide if not an unlimited power of granting an injunction at any stage of any case where it would, according to sufficient legal reasons or on settled legal principles, be right or just to do so.¹

OF THE WRIT OF NE EXEAT.

§ 1168. THE Court of Chancery sometimes issued a writ of ne exeat in suits for specific performance.¹

PART IV.
Ch. iii.

§ 1169. It is conceived that this writ, though not abolished, will in future probably not be often applied for in actions of the kind with which this treatise is concerned; inasmuch as, under the present practice, it is not likely to be issued except in cases where the party applying for the writ can satisfy the Court on all the points on which proof is required by the provisions of the 6th section of the Debtors Act, 1869;² under which if the plaintiff in any action in the Court in which, before the year 1870, the defendant would have been liable to arrest proves, at any time before final judgment, by evidence on oath to the satisfaction of the Judge, that the plaintiff has good cause of action against the defendant to the amount of 50*l.* or upwards, and that there is probable cause for believing that the defendant is about to quit England unless he be apprehended, and that the absence of the defendant from England will materially prejudice the plaintiff in the prosecution of his action, the Judge may order such defendant to be arrested and imprisoned for a period not exceeding six months, unless and until he gives security (not exceeding the amount claimed in the action) that he will not go out of England without the leave of the Court.³

CHAPTER IV.

OF RELIEF AFTER JUDGMENT.

PART IV.
Ch. iv.

Such relief often necessary.

§ 1170. It may and not unfrequently does happen that, after judgment has been given for the specific performance of a contract, some further relief becomes necessary, in consequence of one or other of the parties making default in the performance of something which ought under the judgment to be performed by him or on his part; as, for instance, where a vendor refuses or is unable to execute a proper conveyance of the property, or a purchaser to pay the purchase-money. The character of the consequential relief appropriate to any particular case will of course vary according to the nature of the subject-matter of the contract and the position which the applicant occupies in the transaction; but in every case the application must, under the present practice, be made only to the Court by which the judgment was pronounced,¹ and the multiplicity of legal proceedings which sometimes² occurred before the fusion of the jurisdictions of the Courts of Chancery and Common Law is now practically impossible.³

Modes of relief open to either party.

§ 1171. There are two kinds of relief after judgment for specific performance of which either party to the contract may, in a proper case, avail himself.

¹ Jud. Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), s. 24 (5); Appell. Juris. Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 59), s. 17.

296; Reynolds v. Nelson, 6 Mad. 290; Frank v. Basnett, 2 My. & K. 618.

³ Jud. Act, 1873, s. 24 (7).

§ 1172. (i.) He may obtain (on motion in the action) an order appointing a definite time and place for the completion of the contract by payment of the unpaid purchase-money and delivery over of the executed conveyance and title-deeds,¹ or a period within which the judgment is to be obeyed, and, if the other party fails to obey the order, may thereupon at once issue a writ of sequestration against the defaulting party's estate and effects.² Furthermore, if the default was in the payment of money, the plaintiff may issue his fi. fa.:³ if in some act other than or besides the payment of money, he may move, on notice to the defaulter, for a writ of attachment against him.⁴ Indeed, in a case where a person who had agreed to accept a lease would not, though ordered by the Court to do so, execute the lease, it was held that an attachment was the only means to which the Court could resort for enforcing such execution.⁵

PART IV.
Ch. iv.

i. Sequestration or attachment.

§ 1173. (ii.) He may apply to the Court (by motion in the action) for an order rescinding the contract. On an application of this kind, if it appears that the party moved against has positively refused to complete the contract, its immediate rescission may be ordered: otherwise, the order will be for rescission in default of completion within a limited time.⁶ And the Court will decline to order the deposit to be returned to a defaulting purchaser.⁷ An order for the defendant to pay the plaintiff's costs, and a stay of further proceedings in the action, may also be obtained on this motion.

Damages.

§ 1174. In some cases the order has expressly excepted from the stay of proceedings any application to the Court to award and assess damages sustained by the plaintiffs by reason or in consequence of the breach of the contract.¹ In Henty v. Schröder,² however, Jessel M.R. declined to make this exception, considering that the plaintiffs could not at the same time obtain an order to have the contract rescinded and claim damages for the breach of it. If this be so, it would seem that in many cases the Court must fail to give the plaintiff the full measure of relief requisite for replacing him in the position in which he stood before the contract,—the repayment, for instance, of expenses incurred by him in showing his title.

Vendor's
lien.

§ 1175. A vendor has in many cases another form of relief open to him after a judgment for specific performance, in the enforcement of his lien for unpaid purchase-money, with interest, and his costs of the action.

Where
the lien will and will not prevail.

§ 1176. Wherever there is a valid contract for the sale of land, and the time for completion has arrived, and the purchase-money has not been paid, an equitable lien on the land primâ facie arises for the benefit of the vendor;³ but this primâ facie right may, of course, be repelled. “Although,” said Bacon V.C.,⁴ “the rule of law upon which the doctrine of an unpaid vendor’s lien depends must be very frequently influenced by the particular circumstances of each case in which it is said to arise, there is one plain principle which guides and governs its application in all cases.

If it be expressed, or can be safely and properly inferred from documentary or other evidence, or from the nature of the contract, that it was the intention of the parties that the sale or transfer, however absolute in its terms, was subject to the condition that the purchase-money should be paid, or that the thing contracted to be done by the vendee should be performed, the lien will prevail. If, on the other hand, no such inference can be properly drawn—if the performance of the thing contracted to be done by the vendee was not the condition upon which the transfer was made, but the engagement to do the thing was the consideration for the transfer, the vendor, having accepted that engagement, has the very thing he bargained for, and cannot say that the consideration has not passed to him. In such cases the lien cannot prevail. The rule I have mentioned and its application cannot be more pointedly illustrated nor more clearly explained than in the judgment of Lord Cranworth in Dixon v. Gayfere.¹

§ 1177. Where this lien exists, a vendor obtaining judgment for the specific performance of a contract for the sale of hereditaments of any tenure may have embodied in the judgment a declaration of the lien, and a clause giving him liberty to apply to the Court, in case of need, for its enforcement.² Then, if default in payment of the moneys payable under the judgment by the purchaser ensues, the vendor may have further

- (i.) By sale of the property ;
- (ii.) By the appointment of a receiver pending the sale ;
- (iii.) By means of an injunction operating to restore to him the possession of the property.

i. Sale.

§ 1178. (i.) Upon the vendor satisfying the Court that the purchaser has made default in payment of the moneys directed by the judgment to be paid, an order will be made, on motion or petition in the action, for the sale¹ by the Court of the property comprised in the contract, and the vendor may have liberty to bid.² The proceeds of the sale will be directed to be paid into Court, and leave will be reserved to the vendor to apply in Chambers for payment.³

§ 1179. A vendor of land to a railway company is, with respect to his right to such an order, in no different position from any other vendor, and if the company fail to pay, is entitled to have the land sold, although the railway may have been actually made and may be ready or even opened for traffic.⁴

iii. Injunction restoring possession.

§ 1182. In a previous case Lord Romilly M.R. finally ordered a writ of assistance to issue to put the vendor in possession of the lands comprised in the contract.³

Writ of assistance.

§ 1183. Lastly, a purchaser who has obtained a judgment in his favour for the specific performance of a contract concerning land may, if for any reason he cannot otherwise get a proper and complete conveyance of the purchased property, apply to the Court for an order vesting it in him or appointing some one to convey it to him, with a release, where necessary, of contingent rights.⁴

PART V.

OF INCIDENTAL MATTERS.

CHAPTER I.

OF CONDITIONS OF SALE AND PARTICULARS.

PART V.
Ch. i.

Conditions part of contract.

§ 1184. THE conditions of sale subject to which property is sold constitute part of the contract. The word conditions thus used, and often as used in connection with contracts, is perhaps unfortunate. It is equivalent to terms, and does not import that the terms so described are true conditions precedent or subsequent at law. Particular conditions of sale are considered in several other parts of this treatise.¹ But the general principles upon which the Court acts in construing conditions will be here briefly stated.

How regarded.

§ 1185. In the first place, the circumstances connected with the title and character of the property are, of course, in the knowledge of the vendor rather than of the purchaser; secondly, subject to any stipulation to the contrary, the legal right of a purchaser is to have a good title, according to the rules laid down in the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, and an estate free from all incumbrances.² It follows that conditions tending to give the purchaser less than this are in restraint of a legal right.³

PART V.
Ch. i.Reasonable clearness requisite.

§ 1186. Proceeding on these principles, the Courts have held that it is incumbent on the vendor to express himself with reasonable clearness, and, in the case of sales by auction, so to state his plans, particulars, and conditions of sale as to convey clear information to the class of persons who ordinarily frequent auctions.¹ If the vendor uses terms reasonably capable of misconstruction or ambiguous words, the purchaser is not bound to take on himself the peril of ascertaining the true meaning of the statement,² but may generally construe it in the manner most advantageous to himself:³ and it may be gathered from the case of *Taylor v. Martindale*⁴ that, where a condition of sale is so obscurely worded that, taken in connection with the particulars, it is likely to mislead an ordinary person as to the nature of the property, the Court will on that ground alone, and even on the argument of a summons to vary the certificate as to title, discharge a purchaser from his bargain.

§ 1187. The case of *Torrance v. Bolton*⁵ affords a notable illustration of this principle. There the advertised particulars described property about to be offered for sale as an absolute immediate reversion of a freehold estate, to fall into possession on the death of a lady in her 70th year, and no conditions of sale were issued, but just before the auction the auctioneer's clerk read out from a manuscript a string of conditions, in one of which the property was stated to be subject to three mortgages, and it was stipulated that the purchaser should take a conveyance subject to them.

PART V.
Ch. i.

On the purchaser proving that he bought without distinctly hearing or understanding the effect of this condition, it was held by the Court of Appeal in Chancery that he was entitled to have the contract rescinded, on the ground that the description in the particulars was misleading, and the onus was therefore on the vendor to show (which he failed to do) that the purchaser was not actually misled.

*Jones v.
Rimmer.*

§ 1188. Again where, on a sale by auction in four lots of leaseholds in Liverpool, it appeared from the particular and conditions that three of the four lots were held under the Corporation, upon whose leases there is usually only a nominal rent reserved; and as to the fourth lot, the particular stated the rents at which the houses comprised in it were underlet, and that it was subject to a mortgage for 500*l.*, but by an accidental slip neither particular nor conditions mentioned the fact that the lot was subject to a ground-rent of 43*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.*; upon the purchaser of this lot applying to be discharged from his purchase, deposing that he had bought under the belief that the property was not subject to any ground-rent, it was held that he was entitled to be discharged with costs.¹ “The real question, I think,” said Jessel M.R., “is, Is this a fair particular; is it one in which a purchaser is told what he has to buy, so as to enable him to form an idea of the value of the thing to be purchased. . . . No doubt the purchaser, if he had been a careful purchaser, would have inquired. But is it for the vendor who sends out such a statement as this of the nature of the property to say that the purchaser only was careless? I think the vendor also was careless. It cannot be said to be a fair mode of drawing a particular of sale of leasehold houses subject to a ground-rent of 43*l.* a year, to say nothing about the rent.”²

PART V.
Ch. i.Instances of ambiguity.

§ 1189. So where there was an ambiguity as to which of two leases was referred to, the purchaser's construction was admitted by the Court, and the bill dismissed.¹ So a condition that no title should be called for prior to a lease was not held so explicit as to preclude inquiry into dealings with the contract for the lease which had taken place prior to its being granted.² And where a vendor selling a reversionary estate stipulated that a statement in a deed of 1836 that a life annuity had not been paid for eight years, and a declaration by the vendor that no claim had been made on him since 1841, and that he believed the annuity had not been claimed for the last twenty years, should be conclusive evidence that the annuity had determined; and it appeared that the annuity was granted by a person entitled only in reversion, and was granted for the life of the survivor of four persons; it was held that the description of it as a life annuity was likely to lead to the belief that the annuity was for one life only, and that the omission to state the facts disentitled the vendor to specific performance.³ And so, again, where property sold was described as subject to articles of agreement, bearing date 1804, for a lease for four lives and one year, and in fact the terms of the agreement were such that the lives were not named until 1845, this was considered so ambiguous as to amount to an objection to the performance of the contract.⁴

§ 1190. In *Phillips v. Caldcleugh*⁵ the plaintiff contracted to buy a house, described in the particulars as "a freehold residence," subject to conditions, one of which was that the abstract should commence with a conveyance of April, 1860, and no objection should be taken in respect of the prior title, and another provided that if any error should appear to have been made in the particulars it should not annul the sale. The abstract of the deed of April, 1860, showed it to have been a conveyance of the property, subject "so far as the same premises were subject thereto" to the (unspecified) covenants and conditions on the grantee's part contained in an indenture (not abstracted) of March, 1850. It was held that, the property having been sold as freehold, neither of the above conditions protected the vendors from explaining what these covenants and conditions were, and showing that the property was unincumbered by them.

Conditions construed strictly.

§ 1191. The inclination of the Courts to construe conditions of sale strictly is shown by many other cases,¹ but, perhaps, it is not more strongly illustrated by any than one at the Rolls, where, on a sale of leaseholds, one of the conditions stipulated that the possession under the lease should be deemed conclusive evidence of the due performance, or sufficient waiver, of any breach of the covenants in the lease up to the completion of the sale: Lord Romilly M.R. held that this condition covered all breaches up to the date of the contract, but not a breach between the contract and completion for which the lessor was entitled to enter, and that notwithstanding the express words "up to the completion of this sale."²

² Howell v. Kightley, 21 Beav. 331. See as to this case and a like condition, Lawrie v. Lees, 7 App. Cas. 19.

§ 1192. Again, where one of the conditions stipulated that all objections should be delivered within 14 days from the delivery of the abstract, and another that "if the purchaser shall fail to comply with these conditions his or her deposit shall be thereupon actually forfeited to the vendors;" and after the expiration of the 14 days the purchaser delivered an objection showing a fatal defect in the title; the ground upon which the majority of the Court proceeded, in holding him entitled to recover his deposit, was that the latter condition did not apply to the case of vendors unable to give a good title.¹

PART V.
Ch. i.

Vendor

title.

§ 1193. Where, on a sale of leaseholds, the conditions provided that the purchaser should have possession on the 14th of November, all outgoings up to that day being cleared by the vendors, the purchaser was held to be entitled to insist that an apportioned part of the current rent from the last quarter-day to the 14th of November was an "outgoing" within the meaning of the conditions.² And a stipulation that purchasers are to receive "all rents and profits" from the day fixed for completion has been held to entitle them to an occupation rent from the vendors, on the latter remaining in possession after that day.³

§ 1194. The Court, construing conditions thus strictly, will not by implication extend the terms of one condition so as to enlarge another beyond what it actually expresses. In the case of Southby v. Hutt,⁴ the interpretation of conditions in this respect was fully considered. There, by the conditions of sale, the vendor agreed to deliver an abstract and deduce a good title, except as to part of the estate acquired under an inclosure, as to which he was not to be required to go back beyond the award; and by a subsequent condition it was stipulated that the vendor should deliver to the largest purchaser all deeds in his custody, but should not be required to produce any other deeds than those in his possession and set forth in the abstract: and it was held that the latter condition did not so affect the former as to entitle the vendor to insist on verifying his abstract only so far as could be done by deeds in his possession, but that the purchaser was entitled to a general verification. And so a condition that certain specified deeds only should be given up, does not limit the title to be shown to that disclosed by these deeds.¹

Time for delivery of objections.

§ 1195. On the same principle of strict construction, where (as commonly happens) there is a condition that all objections to the title are to be taken within a specified number of days from the delivery of the abstract, or to be deemed waived, and that time shall, in that respect, be of the essence of the contract, the time will not begin to run against the purchaser until the vendor has delivered a perfect abstract.²

Good faith.

§ 1196. It is a natural principle of interpretation, that a vendor shall never be allowed to avail himself of the conditions of sale for the purpose of acting fraudulently. The Court requires good faith in conditions of sale.³ Accordingly a condition for compensation will not apply where there has been misrepresentation;⁴ and under a condition giving a vendor a power of rescission in case of any objections to the abstract, he will not be permitted fraudulently to deliver an imperfect abstract to which objections would necessarily be taken, and thereupon avail himself of his fraud to avoid his contract by means of this condition.¹ So it seems that a condition as to objections to title being delivered by a certain time, would not apply where there had been misrepresentation;² and a condition not drawn bond fide, but intended to cover difficulties arising from facts uncommunicated, will not preclude the purchaser from taking the objection which it is designed to guard against.³

PART V.
Ch. i.

§ 1197. So, again, a condition excluding or limiting a purchaser's right to title must, in order to bind the purchaser, be fair and explicit, i.e., must state all facts within the knowledge of the vendor which are material to enable the purchaser to determine whether he will or will not buy: therefore, a stipulation that a title should begin with a deed of 1845, stating the parties, but not stating as the fact was that the deed was a voluntary one except from the consideration to pay the rent and perform the covenants as to certain leaseholds was held not to bind the purchaser.⁴

Conditions limiting title.

§ 1198. And so a vendor selling property subject to all easements, but without mentioning any, when his solicitor knew of their rumoured existence, was held to sell under a misleading condition.⁵

Condition
as to

§ 1199. Further, though there may have been neither fraud nor misrepresentation on the vendor's part, the Court will be slow to allow him to get rid of an inconvenient but legitimate requisition by means of a condition giving him a power of rescinding the contract. Thus, where a vendor contracted to sell leasehold property under a bonâ fide belief that there was no charge upon it; and the condition of sale provided that, for the purpose of any objection or requisition, the abstract should be deemed to be perfect if it supplied the information suggesting the same: the abstract delivered contained nothing showing or suggesting the existence of any incumbrance, but during the investigation of the title it was discovered that there was in fact a mortgage on the property, which the purchasers thereupon required the vendor to discharge: it was held that, under the circumstances, the vendor was not entitled to rescind the contract under one of the conditions, which in terms empowered him to do so in the event of the purchaser's insisting on any requisition which the vendor should be unable, or on the ground of expense should decline, to remove or comply with.¹

Misleading condition.

§ 1200. A condition of sale may, of course, without any intentional fraud or misrepresentation, be in fact misleading or erroneous. It will be bad as misleading if it require the purchaser to assume that which the vendor knows not to be true or if it assert that the state of the title is not accurately known to the vendor, when it in fact is known to him.²

Harnett
v. Baker.

§ 1201. On this principle, where, one of the conditions being that the title to the beneficial ownership should commence with the will of A. B., and the purchaser should assume that A. B. was at his death beneficially entitled to the property in fee simple free from incumbrances, the abstract showed that A. B. had only entered into a contract for the purchase of the property with persons whose title to sell was doubtful, and had not paid the purchase-money, it was held that the purchaser was not bound by the condition.¹

PART V.
Ch. i.

§ 1202. But on the other hand, a condition is not held misleading if it require the purchaser to assume certain facts for the purpose of covering a flaw in the title, provided the vendor believed the facts to be as he asked the purchaser to assume them, though he was not in a position to establish them by legal proof.²

§ 1203. Where conditions state facts upon which they are grounded, these facts must be proved.³

Facts stated
in conditions.

Where the vendor states facts, and then states that the purchaser shall take such interest as the vendor under such state of facts has, the purchaser is, it seems, bound to take the title as it is;⁴ but where, after stating facts, the conditions add, as a positive and distinct fact, and not as a conclusion of law from the preceding circumstances, that the vendor can make a good title to the fee: as this title may have arisen from independent sources, the purchaser is not bound by the title resulting from the facts, but may inquire generally whether the vendor can make out a good title.⁵

§ 1204. With respect to sales by the Court: it would be going too far to say that, in such sales, the conditions are dealt with on different principles from those which obtain in ordinary cases. But the Court is scrupulously careful not to strain the meaning of any condition framed under its authority,⁶ nor to allow a purchaser to be prejudiced by any such condition which appears on examination to be misleading or unfair.

*Edwards v.
Wickwar.*

§ 1205. Accordingly where property had been sold under a decree, subject to conditions, one of which provided that no requisition should be made in respect of a certain underlease of 1852, or of any underlease prior to 1864, and it turned out that another underlease (besides that of 1852) had, to the vendors' knowledge, been made prior to 1864, the Court held that it was the duty of the vendors to give the fullest information which they themselves possessed as to the title, and therefore to disclose the underlease in question, and that the purchaser was entitled, notwithstanding the condition, to require it to be produced.¹

*Williams
v. Wood.*

§ 1206. So, in another case of sale under a decree, where the conditions (settled by one of the conveying Counsel of the Court) stated the facts correctly, and in a manner which might have led a lawyer to the inference that the vendor had no title, but would not lead an ordinary purchaser to that conclusion, Lord Romilly M.R. refused to enforce specific performance against the purchaser, saying that it was of great importance, particularly in sales by the Court, that conditions of sale should distinctly explain any difficulty of title.²

Other
instances.

§ 1207. In a later case the same Judge relieved a purchaser from a misleading condition on the express ground of the sale having taken place under the authority of the Court; but he at the same time intimated that such a condition would be bad in any sale.³ On the other hand, a condition precluding the purchaser from objecting to the Court's jurisdiction to order the sale of a reversion in which (as the condition expressly stated) infants were interested was held by the Court of Appeal in Chancery to be fair, reasonable, and binding.¹

PART V.

§ 1208. It may here be noticed that if the conditions of sale clearly stipulate that the property will be conveyed subject to specified liabilities, the vendor may enforce the insertion in the conveyance of apt words for giving effect to the stipulation, even though it be not shown or alleged that the property is in fact subject to any of the specified liabilities.

Stipulation as to wording of conveyance.

Thus where, on a sale by auction, one of the conditions provided that "the property is sold and will be conveyed subject to all free rents, quit rents, and incidents of tenure, and to all rights of way, water, and other easements, if any," it was held that the vendors were entitled to have the words "subject to all free rents, &c.," inserted in the conveyance, notwithstanding the purchaser's objection that they were wholly inapplicable to the property.²

CHAPTER II.

OF COMPENSATION.

PART V.
Ch. ii.

Vendor unable to perform the whole
of the
contract.

§ 1209. WHERE a vendor is able to perform the contract in its substance, but unable to perform it literally in all its parts, he may yet sue the purchaser for its specific performance. On the other hand, where a vendor has not substantially all that he has contracted to sell, he cannot sue for specific performance, but the purchaser may generally insist on taking what the vendor has.

Origin of the right to compensation.

§ 1210. From these principles arises a right in the purchaser to compensation in respect of the difference between the thing which the vendor insists that he shall take, or he himself insists on taking, and the expressed subject-matter of the contract. It will be shown that the subjects of compensation in the two cases are very different, and that many defects for which the purchaser may obtain compensation will not be made the subjects of compensation at the instance of the vendor.¹ The rights of the parties to compensation may be and frequently are qualified by the contract, which in many cases contains a condition on the point.

Pleading.

1211. It is conceived that, under the present practice, if either party is aware of any case for compensation, and means to insist on it, he ought distinctly to

¹ Compare Nelthorpe v. Holgate, You. 295. See also Wilson v. Williams, 3 Jur. N. S. 810 (Wood V.C.).
1 Coll. 203, with Collier v. Jenkins, raise the question on his pleading;¹ but it seems that compensation may be granted for a defect appearing on the investigation of title, though the pleadings and judgment make no reference to compensation.²

PART V.
Ch. ii.

§ 1212. It will be convenient to consider separately (I.) the cases where the vendor is the party insisting on the performance of the contract, subdividing these into (α) cases where either the contract contains no condition for compensation, or at any rate no such condition enters into the question, and (β) cases where there is such a condition; and then (II.) to deal in a similar way with the cases in which the purchaser is the party insisting on the contract.

Division
of the subject.

I. a. Vendor insisting on the contract, there being no condition for compensation.

§ 1213. The description by which a thing is contracted to be sold is a matter for which the vendor is primâ facie responsible. Inasmuch however as Equity looks to the substance rather than to the mere letter of a contract, if the vendor shows that he can substantially do what he contracted to do, he is entitled to enforce specific performance, although he may be unable to do it modo et formâ according to the letter of the contract; the difference between what he contracted to do and what he can actually do becoming the subject of compensation.

Vendor
must be able to perform his part substantially.

§ 1214. "Lord Thurlow," said Lord Eldon, in a passage already cited, "used to refer this doctrine of specific performance to this; that it is scarcely possible, that there may not be some small mistake or inaccuracy; as that a leasehold interest, represented to be for twenty-one years, may be for twenty years and nine months: some of those little circumstances, that would defeat an action at Law ; and yet lie so clearly in compensation, that they ought not to prevent the execution of the contract.”¹

Limitation of the principle.

§ 1215. But “if (to quote Lord Erskine) a Court of Equity can compel a party to perform a contract, that is substantially different from that which he entered into, and proceed upon the principle of compensation, as it has compelled him to execute a contract substantially different, and substantially less than that, for which he stipulated, without some very distinct limitation of such a jurisdiction, having all the precision of law, the rights of mankind under contracts must be extremely uncertain.”²

Essential and non-essential defects to be distinguished.

§ 1216. It falls then to be considered (i) what defects or circumstances will be considered by the Court so material or essential as to debar a vendor from enforcing the contract at all, and (ii) what, on the other hand, will be held so immaterial or non-essential as to allow of the contract being enforced at his instance.

i. Material part wanting.

§ 1217. (i.) The contract will not be enforced against the purchaser with compensation where a material part of the subject-matter is wanting. Formerly the Court went far beyond what it now does in enforcing contracts substantially different from those entered into ; as where a wharfinger who contracted for a house and wharf was compelled to take the house without the wharf : but of this mode of proceeding Lord Eldon frequently expressed his disapproval, and it is now abandoned by the Court.³ “The Court," said Lord Eldon on one occasion, "is from time to time approaching nearer to the doctrine that a purchaser shall have that which he contracted for, or not be compelled to take that which he did not mean to have."¹

§ 1218. Accordingly, where a wharf and jetty were contracted to be sold, and it turned out that the jetty was liable to be removed by the Corporation of London, specific performance was refused.² In the case of the sale of a residence and four acres of land, a slip of ground of about a quarter of an acre between the house and the high road, to which no title was made, was held not to be a subject for compensation.³ And in one case Lord Eldon thought that a defect in title in respect of eleven out of seventy acres, which do not appear to have been peculiar in their position or character, "would probably be material to the suit."⁴

§ 1219. In some cases a part of the estate contracted for may be material because, if any one else were to possess it, it would probably be turned to some purpose prejudicial to the enjoyment of the estate; as where land near a mansion was such that it would be most profitably used for building ground or for a brick-kiln. But the nuisance thus apprehended must be probable, and not merely distant, fanciful, and conjectural.⁵ substantial extent, different from that which the vendor has represented himself to be selling, he will not be able to enforce performance, unless indeed the purchaser has waived the objection.

Freehold estate with a leasehold adjoining.

§ 1221. Thus where, on a sale by auction, the particulars described the property to be sold as a “freehold estate with a leasehold adjoining,” and it turned out that, of the seventy acres of which the estate consisted, sixty-two were leasehold and only eight freehold, Lord Alvanley M.R. said that, if the purchaser had objected on that ground, he should have thought the purchase ought not to be carried into execution. As, however, the purchaser had not taken the objection, his Lordship granted an injunction restraining an action for the deposit on the terms of the vendor bringing the money into Court.¹

Estate
sold as tithe free.

§ 1222. Again, where an estate is sold as tithe free, or subject to a modus, and it is in fact subject to tithe, the Court will not, as a general rule,² compel the purchaser to take it with compensation.³

Incum-
brances.

§ 1223. Nor, it seems, would the Court compel a person who had contracted for the purchase of an estate free from incumbrances to take, instead of that, an estate subject to an incumbrance amounting to one half of the purchase-money;⁴ though if there is only a small incumbrance upon a considerable estate, the decision may, as will be shown, be otherwise.⁵

Indemnity.

§ 1224. In some cases the compensation to be made for a defect may take the form of an indemnity; which is a species of compensation—inasmuch as something else is given in place of the very thing contracted for—applicable to cases where the defect or loss is not certain but contingent.

PART V.
Ch. ii.

§ 1225. The Court will not, however, at a vendor's instance, compel the purchaser to take an indemnity, unless such indemnity was part of the contract between the parties.¹ Thus, where the sublessee of a house had contracted to grant a twenty-one years' lease of it to the defendant, but, owing to the house in question being, with five others, subject to the covenants and proviso for re-entry contained in the head lease, could not give the defendant a secure lease for the term of his contract, specific performance was refused, though the plaintiff offered to indemnify the defendant in case of his eviction.² Similarly it has been held that a purchaser could not be forced to take an indemnity in respect of a misdescription,³ or of a possible liability under an ambiguous covenant.⁴

Purchaser
not compelled to take indemnity.

§ 1226. In a case decided by Lord Hatherley (then Wood V.C.) in the year 1858, the contract was that the defendant should procure a lease then vested in his father to be surrendered to the plaintiff, and would thereupon accept a new lease from the plaintiff and pay a premium of £300 for it. The father refused to surrender his lease: whereupon the plaintiff filed her bill for specific performance, praying that, if the defendant could not obtain the surrender, he might be decreed to accept a lease commencing from the expiration of his father's lease, and in other respects in the terms of the contract, and also to make good her loss resulting from the non-performance of the contract. It was held on demurrer that the Court could not interfere to decree specific performance, but would leave the plaintiff to her remedy at Common Law in damages.¹

Misrepresentation.

§ 1227. The principle of compensation will not be applied at the instance of a vendor who has been guilty of misrepresentation. This point will be illustrated hereafter.²

Conduct inconsistent with contract.

§ 1228. Even where the circumstances are such that the vendor might originally have enforced the contract with compensation, he may lose his right to do so by subsequent conduct inconsistent with the contract:—as for instance where, one of the terms of the contract being that immediate possession should be given, and the purchaser having taken possession accordingly, the vendor, on a question as to compensation arising, turned him out of possession.³

ii. Defect not essential.

§ 1229. (ii.) On the other hand, in each of the following cases the defect was considered a proper subject for compensation, but not so essential as to debar the vendor altogether from enforcing the contract:—where an estate of about 186 acres was described as freehold, and in fact about two acres, part of a park, were held only from year to year;⁴ where there was an objection to the title of six acres out of a large estate, and those acres do not appear to have been material to the enjoyment of the rest;⁵ where fourteen acres were sold as meadow, and only twelve answered that description;⁶ and where, on a purchase by a tenant in possession, property described as forty-six feet in depth proved to be only thirty-three feet.⁷

Profits overstated.

§ 1230. In one case where, on a sale of colliery works, the vendors had stated the annual profits of the concern at a sum largely in excess of the actual amount, they were nevertheless allowed to enforce the contract, but on the terms of making compensation to the purchasers by submitting to an abatement from the purchase-money, bearing the same proportion to the excess as the total purchase-money bore to the capitalised value of the amount of profits stated by the vendors.¹

PART V.
Ch. ii.

§ 1231. On the general principle already stated,² the mere fact of the existence of some small or (to the purchaser) immaterial incumbrances on the property is not enough to deprive a vendor of his right to insist on the specific performance of the contract.

Trifling
incum-
brances.

§ 1232. Thus, where tithes contracted to be sold were subject to sundry small annual charges,³ and where the estate sold was subject to quit-rents (which may be regarded as incidents of tenure),⁴ the Court enforced the contracts, in one case with an inquiry whether there ought to be any and what indemnity in respect of the charge,⁵ and in the others with compensation to the purchaser by way of abatement from the purchase-money.

Instances.

§ 1233. And in a case where an estate sold as fen land, and so described in the particular, was subject, under a local but public Act, to certain embanking and drainage taxes which were not mentioned in the particulars, the Court, on the ground apparently of the Act imposing the charges being a public Act, decreed against the purchaser specific performance of the contract without compensation.⁶

described as tithe-free will not generally be compelled to complete his purchase, if it turn out that the land is subject to tithe,—it being considered that, as a general rule, the right to the tithe is so material to the enjoyment of the land as to have formed the inducement to the purchase,—still, where the circumstances show that the right to the tithe is not thus material, the general rule ceases to apply. For instance, where an estate of about 140 acres was described as subject to tithe except 32 acres, and the exemption from tithe of those 32 acres was not proved;¹ and again where the circumstances showed that the question whether the land was to be tithe-free or not was an immaterial one in the view of the purchaser;² the Court compelled the purchaser to complete the contract with compensation.

Patent
defect.

§ 1235. On the principle that a warranty or a representation is not binding, where in respect of some defect that is perfectly patent,³ the Court will not give a purchaser compensation for defects of this nature: so that a contract was enforced, at a vendor's instance, without any compensation in respect of the misdescription of a farm described as lying within a ring fence, which did not so lie, as the purchaser had himself seen and knew; while in the same case compensation was given for latent defects.⁴

Such
defect
must be visible.

§ 1236. But in order that this principle shall apply, the defect must be perfectly visible to everybody: therefore, where a representation was made by the vendor as to the dry-rot in a house, which was not a matter so perfectly visible, the Court gave compensation:⁵ and where a tenant in possession purchased the property, which was represented as 46 feet in depth, but was in fact only 33 feet, he was held entitled to compensation, inasmuch as occupiers are not in the habit of measuring their premises.¹

PART V.
Ch. ii.

§ 1237. Moreover, if the purchaser, after he knows of a defect, acts in a manner implying a waiver of it, the vendor becomes entitled to insist on the completion of the purchase without compensation. Thus, where the abstract, delivered in January, showed part of the estate to be subject to a right of sporting, and in the following April the purchaser at his own request was let into possession, and afterwards several letters passed between the parties, and most of the purchase-money was paid without any objection on the score of the right before, in October of the same year, the purchaser claimed compensation; it was held that he had waived the objection, and specific performance without compensation was decreed against him.²

Waiver of defect.

§ 1238. In an Irish case specific performance was enforced, at a vendor's instance, without compensation for a deficiency of nearly one half in acreage of property described in the contract as "about 200 acres of mountain land," the land being a waste of heath of trifling value.³

Defect immaterial.

I. β. Vendor insisting upon the contract, there being a condition for compensation.

§ 1239. In the cases now to be considered, while the general principles already stated are applicable, and the rights of the vendor are usually somewhat extended by the language of the particular condition, at the same time, conditions of sale being, as we have seen,⁴ construed strictly against the vendor, it is incumbent upon him, if he rely upon the condition to compel the purchaser to carry the contract into execution, taking compensation for some defect, to show that the defect is of such a nature as properly to fall within the condition.¹

Material
misdescription.

§ 1240. Quite apart from any consideration of fraud, where there is in a contract a misdescription “in a material and substantial point, so far affecting the subject-matter of the contract as that it may be reasonably supposed, that, but for such misdescription, the purchaser might never have entered into the contract at all, in such case the contract is avoided altogether, and the purchaser is not bound to resort to the clause of compensation.”² An instance in which the converse of this principle was applied, and a mistake was held not to prevent specific performance, may be found in the case of In re Fawcett and Holmes:³ there there was a contract for the sale of a house and builder’s yard, described as containing 1,372 square yards, and a clause for compensation in the event of misdescription: in fact, the contents of the property were only 1,033 square yards. The error was held not to affect the substance of the thing sold, and the vendor was allowed to enforce specific performance with compensation.

Prohibited trades imperfectly enumerated.

§ 1241. On the other hand, where the particulars of a leasehold house in Covent Garden stated that, by the lease, “no offensive trade was to be carried on, and that the premises could not be let to a coffee-house keeper or working hatter,” and there was a condition for compensation in case of error or misstatement, and the original lease, in fact, prohibited a vast variety of other businesses than those described, including the sale of any provisions, the purchaser was held to be entitled to rescind the contract.¹

PART V.

§ 1242. Again, where there was a condition for compensation in the case of error in the description of the premises, or of any other error whatsoever in the particulars, and the property which was described as copyhold turned out to be partly freehold, Lord Romilly M.R. refused to compel specific performance by the purchaser: he had contracted to purchase one thing, and he might refuse to accept another.²

Copyhold described as freehold.

§ 1243. In another case a yard, which was essential to the enjoyment of the property sold, was held from year to year, instead of for the term of twenty-three years for which the rest of the premises were held, and at a separate rent: this was considered to be a defect which the vendors were not entitled to bring within a condition for compensation for mistake in the description of the property or any other error whatsoever in the particulars.³

Tenancy yearly
only.

§ 1244. In *Madeley v. Booth*⁴ leasehold property was sold for the residue of a term of ninety-nine years, which commenced on the 24th June, 1838, under conditions which prohibited the purchaser from calling for the lessor's title, and stipulated that any error or misstatement of the property, term of years, or other description, should not vitiate the sale, but that a compensation should be given: the term sold was really not the residue described, but a derivative term less by three days than the original one: Knight Bruce V.C. held that the underlease was not substantially the same thing, the resulting rights being different, and accordingly dismissed with costs a bill by the vendor praying for specific performance with compensation. This decision, disapproved of by the late M.R. Sir George Jessel,¹ has received sanction from the case of In re Beyfus and Masters,² where, however, the stipulation as to errors which were to be the subject of compensation extended only to the description of the property.

materially affecting enjoyment.

§ 1245. The principle under consideration of course applies where, though the whole land is conveyed, it, or a part of it, is subject to rights which materially affect its enjoyment: thus a right of way, which would render useless for building a close advertised as building-ground, has been held not to come within a condition for compensation;³ so grants of rights to the owners of lower lands, to fetch water from a spring on the upper lands, to cut and cleanse drains leading the water to the lower lands, and other similar rights having reference to four and a half acres out of about thirty sold, were held to constitute a material defect in the title to the upper lands, and consequently were not the subject of compensation, notwithstanding a condition that a mistake in the description or an error in the particulars should be the subject of compensation, and not annul the contract.⁴

Compensation reasonably estimable.

§ 1246. Generally, where there is a proper case for compensation, and the amount can be reasonably estimated, the Court is disposed to grant it.⁵

Reasonable estimate unattainable.

§ 1247. But where this reasonable estimate is not attainable, the Court refuses to compel the purchaser to take compensation: thus, where a house and grounds were sold by the Court, and, pending the making out of the title, some ornamental timber was cut down, the purchaser was discharged, because the act affected the value of the property to the purchaser, as a residence, in a way which the Court was unable to measure.¹ And where the particulars represented the average size of the timber in the wood, which was the property sold, as approaching 50 feet, but in no way specified the number of the trees; and the witnesses for the plaintiff (the vendor) treated no trees containing less than 10 feet as timber trees, and on this basis showed an average of 34 feet 6 inches; whilst the defendant's witnesses, reckoning all trees containing not less than 5 feet as timber trees, showed an average of 22 feet only; it was held by Lord Hatherley (then Wood V.C.) that the subject-matter sold fell short of the description; but, in the absence of any representation as to the number of trees, the Court had no data for calculation, and therefore could not give compensation, but dismissed the bill.²

§ 1248. The same principle seems to have governed another case, in which the premises were described as in the joint occupation of A. and B. as lessees, whereas they were in fact in their joint occupation, but not as lessees, but A. was the assignee from C., the original lessee: it was held that this was not a case for compensating the purchaser, but that he could not be forced to take an indemnity.³

*Ridgway
v. Gray.*

§ 1249. On the other hand, where the conditions provided that any misstatement of the quality, tenure, outgoings, or other particulars of the property, described by an innocent mistake as "valuable freehold estate," should be the subject of compensation; and one lot was in fact of copyhold tenure, but it appeared that under a composition with the lord of the manor the difference in value between copyholds in that manor and freeholds was very slight; it was held that the vendor was entitled to compel the purchaser to take the lot in question with compensation.¹

Under-
lease called lease.

§ 1250. Further, although, where a man sells a lease for a definite term of years, and nothing more is said on either side, he cannot make a good title unless he shows that it is an original lease,² yet where the particulars and conditions of sale in effect tell the purchaser that the lease which is offered for sale is in fact an underlease, the vendor is entitled to enforce completion without compensation, and that notwithstanding a condition for compensation in the event of any error or mistake appearing in the description, or in the nature or quality of the vendor's interest therein, or in the particulars of the sale. For per se calling a thing a lease which is a lease is not a misdescription.³

Where no compensation.

§ 1251. The cases where the defect is, from its magnitude or importance, not a proper subject for compensation, have been already stated. We may now consider some other cases, where the doctrine will not be applied.

Misrepre-
sentation.

§ 1252. The principle of compensation, whether arising under the general doctrine of the Court, or under a condition for compensation in case of any error or misstatement, will not be applied where there has been misrepresentation,⁴—even, it seems, though the difference be of such a character that, if it had arisen from mere error, it would have been subject to compensation, as, for instance, in respect of the difference between copyholds nearly equal in value to freeholds and freeholds.¹

PART V.
Ch. ii.

§ 1253. Thus where, on a sale by auction, one of the lots was described as to be sold with a reservoir and waterworks yielding a yearly rental of about 60%, and it turned out that this rental arose from supplying with water from the reservoir some houses between which and the reservoir lay lands of other proprietors, through which the vendor had no right to carry the water except under a license from year to year for which he paid rent; it was held that the description contained such a misrepresentation as to debar the vendor from enforcing specific performance.²

Price v. Macaulay.

§ 1254. In another case, where there was a misrepresentation as to the tenancy of a house, the Court refused to hold the purchaser to his contract and make him take compensation for the delay which would have been needed for an ejectment, although the purchaser bought for investment, and not for residence.³

As to tenancy.

§ 1255. Again, where the particulars of sale described a farm, which formed about one-third of the estate sold, as "lately in the occupation of A. at an annual rent of 290*l.* 15*s.*," and the facts were that A. had occupied the farm for a year and a quarter only, and then at the nominal rent of 3*l.* for the first quarter, and that since his tenancy (which came to an end about sixteen months before the sale) the vendor had been willing to let the farm at 225*l.*, and knew that nothing like 290*l.* a year could be obtained for it, the Court held that such misrepresentation was not a matter for compensation, but entitled the purchaser to be discharged altogether from his purchase.¹

Flourishing description.

§ 1256. But it seems that a mere flourishing description in particulars, such as that land is fertile and improvable, whereas part of it has in fact been abandoned as useless, cannot, except in extreme cases—as for instance where a considerable part is covered with water, or otherwise irreclaimable—be considered such a misrepresentation as to entitle a purchaser to be discharged.²

II. a. Purchaser insisting on the contract, there being no condition for compensation.

Purchaser
may take all that vendor
has.

§ 1257. Although, as a general rule, where the vendor has not substantially the whole interest he has contracted to sell, he, as we have seen, cannot enforce the contract against the purchaser, yet the purchaser can insist on having all that the vendor can convey, with a compensation for the difference.³

The
principle stated by Lord Eldon.

§ 1258. “If,” said Lord Eldon,⁴ “a man, having partial interests in an estate, chooses to enter into a contract, representing it, and agreeing to sell it, as his own, it is not competent to him afterwards to say, though he has valuable interests, he has not the entirety; and therefore the purchaser shall not have the benefit of his contract. For the purpose of this jurisdiction, the person contracting under those circumstances is bound by the assertion in his contract; and, if the vendee chooses to take as much as he can have,

he has a right to that, and to an abatement; and the Court will not hear the objection by the vendor, that the purchaser cannot have the whole."¹

PART V.
Ch. ii.

§ 1259. The principle was acted on by Lord Nottingham, in the case of Cleaton v. Gower,² where the defendant Gower was tenant for life of certain estates in Shropshire, and he and his late father agreed with the plaintiff that the plaintiff should open and work certain mines, and should enjoy the minerals raised for ten years, if the defendant or his issue male should so long live, at a yearly rent of 25*l*. The plaintiff sought a specific performance of this contract: the defendant objected that he was only tenant for life, and subject to account for waste, and that he could not execute the contract because it was inconsistent with his power: the Court decreed the defendant to execute the contract so far as he was capable of doing it, and likewise to satisfy the plaintiff such damages as he had sustained in not enjoying the premises according to the contract.

Cleaton
v. Gower.

§ 1260. The principle is also well illustrated by Lord Bolingbroke's case,³ before Lord Thurlow. The incumbent of a living had contracted with a tenant in remainder for the purchase of the advowson, and on the faith of the contract had built a much better house on the glebe than he would otherwise have done: the tenant for life refusing to concur in the sale, Lord Thurlow compelled the tenant in remainder to convey a base fee for levying a fine, with a covenant to suffer a recovery on the death of the tenant for life.

Wheatley
v. Slade.

§ 1261. In *Wheatley v. Slade*¹ Shadwell V.C. held the principle under discussion not to apply where a large part of the property could not be conveyed; and consequently, the contract in that case being for the sale of a lace manufactory, and it turning out that the vendors were only entitled to nine-sixteenths of the whole, and that those parts were subject to a debt which would exhaust nearly the whole of the purchase-money, he refused specific performance. The Vice Chancellor's decision appears to have been influenced by the circumstance that the vendors entered into the contract under a mistaken impression that they were possessed of the entirety of the property. But the case, even if it can thus or otherwise upon its own particular circumstances be supported, is not, it is submitted, likely now to be followed. For it will be shown that, though the difference between the property contracted to be sold and that which the vendor can actually convey may be great, the Court will generally, notwithstanding this circumstance, enforce the contract where it sees that its intention is the sale of whatever interest the vendor has.

Modern application of the principle.

§ 1262. Indeed the tendency of the Court in recent years has been to apply the principle liberally. Thus where two vendors contracted to sell two-sixths of certain leaseholds "together with all other their rights and interests therein," and it turned out that they were only entitled to two twenty-first parts each, the purchaser was held entitled to specific performance of the contract to the extent of the vendors' interests, with a proportionate abatement of the purchase-money.²

¹ 4 Sim. 126. See the observations of Lord St. Leonards on this case, Vend. 263; also Maw v. Topham, 19 Beav. 576, where the vendors were only entitled to three-fourths; Burrow v. Scammell, 19 Ch. D. 175.

² Jones v. Evans, 17 L. J. Ch. 469. See too Leslie v. Crommelin, I. R. 2 Eq. 134.

§ 1263. Again, where A., who had only an estate pur autre vie in property, the remainder in fee belonging to his wife, contracted to sell the fee simple to B. (who was ignorant of the state of the title), and then got his wife to concur with him in conveying it to C. (who knew of B.'s contract), it was held that B. was entitled to have a conveyance from C. of A.'s interest, with compensation in respect of his wife's interest which he was unable to convey or bind without her consent.¹

Wife's
interest.

§ 1264. So where vendors contracted to sell the entirety of certain freeholds, and it was afterwards discovered that they were entitled to an undivided moiety only, the purchaser obtained a decree for the specific performance of the contract by the vendors to the extent of their moiety, with an abatement from the purchase-money of one-half the amount.²

Title to § 1265. And so where A. and B. contracted to sell leasehold property to C., and on examining the title it appeared that A. was entitled to a moiety subject to a mortgage for its full value, and that B. had no interest at all,—facts which were not known to C. at the time when he entered into the contract,—C. was held entitled to an assignment of A.'s moiety, on the terms of covenanting to pay the rent and perform the covenants in the lease, and also to pay the mortgage-debt, and to indemnify A. in respect of those liabilities.³

§ 1266. In each of the cases referred to in the last four sections the purchaser was unaware, at the time when he entered into the contract, of the imperfection of the vendor's title.⁴ But even if the purchaser has from the first been aware of the state of the title, that circumstance will not necessarily exclude him from the benefit of the principle under consideration.

Instance.

§ 1267. Thus, in a recent case, real estate stood limited by marriage settlement to such uses as A. and his wife should appoint, and in default of appointment to the use of the trustees of the settlement during the wife's life, in trust for her separate use, with remainder to A. in fee. A. agreed to sell the fee simple to C. by a contract in which the wife's interest was mentioned, but which went on to say that A. would procure a proper assurance to be executed by all proper parties: afterwards the purchaser actually paid over the purchase-money to the trustees, but the wife refused to convey her interest. Bacon V.C. held that C. was entitled to have the purchase completed to the extent of A.'s reversion in fee, with compensation for the life interest of the wife and a lien on the fund in the hands of the trustees.¹ "If," said the Vice Chancellor, "a man enters into a contract to sell something, representing that he has the entire interest in it, or the means of conveying the entire interest, and receives the price of it and does not perform his contract, then the other party to the contract, who has parted with his money or is ready to pay his money, is entitled to be placed in the same position he would be in if the contract had been completed; or if not, by compensation to be placed in the same position in which he would be entitled to stand."²

Limitations of the principle.

§ 1268. It is obvious that, in thus proceeding, the Court is executing the contract, cy près, or rather perhaps is carrying into execution a new contract,³—a course in which difficulties sometimes arise which put restrictions on the application of the principle under discussion. These have now to be considered.

PART V.
Ch. ii.

§ 1269. The principle will not be applied so as to exclude a right which the vendor may have reserved to determine the contract rather than complete with compensation. So where a contract provided that no misdescription should annul the sale or be the subject of compensation, and further, that if the purchaser should insist on any requisition which the vendor should be unable or unwilling to comply with, the vendor should have the power to rescind: and the acreage of the plot sold was by an innocent error misstated, the plaintiff demanded compensation, and the vendor gave notice to rescind the contract and the purchaser insisted on performance, it was held that the vendor was entitled to rescind, and that the purchaser could not claim the right to performance with compensation.¹

Where prejudice to a right
to rescind.

§ 1270. The principle will not, it seems, be applied where the alienation of the partial interest of the vendor might prejudice the rights of third persons interested in the estate. Thus where a tenant for life without impeachment of waste under a strict settlement had contracted for the sale of the fee, the Court refused to compel him to alienate his life interest, on the ground that a stranger would be likely to use his liberty to commit waste in a manner different from a father, and more prejudicial to the rights of those in remainder.²

contract for the sale of the wife's fee simple estate to the plaintiff, who knew from the plain language of the contract the true state of the title, it was held that, as the plaintiff clearly never could have believed for a moment that the husband could sell the fee simple, he was not entitled to have a conveyance of all the husband's interest, i. e., his estate for the joint lives of himself and his wife and his estate by curtesy with an abatement of the purchase-money; and the bill was accordingly dismissed.¹

instances.

§ 1273. Similarly where vendors were entitled only to three-fourths of the property, and the purchaser was at the time he filed his bill aware, or had good reason to believe, that no good title could be made to the whole of the premises, Lord Romilly M.R. held that, though he might probably have recovered damages, yet, as he chose to file a bill for specific performance, he was not entitled to any abatement from the purchase-money, but that he might take without abatement the three-quarters which the vendors could convey.² And it has been decided that where a person has dealt with a tenant for life for a certain lease, being at the time aware that it would be in excess of the tenant for life's power, and so endeavouring to put a fraud upon the settlement, he will not afterwards be allowed to call for a lease from the tenant for life to the extent of his interest: the contract was not at the time it was entered into a fair and proper one, and the Court therefore would not interfere.³

But where woodland was sold as so many acres, and the wood as having been valued at so much, the abatement was for so much as the soil covered with wood would be worth without the wood.² Where a road was described as "made up" and it was not, compensation was assessed not at the sum it would cost to make up the road, but at the difference between the value of the property as it existed at the sale and the value it would have had if the road had been made up.³ cases already referred to,¹ it is conceived that the Court will seldom now consider a difficulty of this kind insuperable.

Westmacott v. Robins.

§ 1277. In one case what was contracted to be sold was an absolute and indefeasible estate in fee, and it turned out that the vendors held under a Crown grant, containing various reservations and conditions with a proviso for re-entry on breach of condition. The Court considered that the proper amount of compensation was not estimable, but held that the purchaser was not bound to take the property without compensation, and therefore was entitled to the repayment with interest of a part of the purchase-money that he had paid, and to a lien on the estate for the amount.²

Compensation approximately ascertainable.

§ 1278. Although, where there are no data from which the amount of compensation can be ascertained, the Court cannot enforce the contract with compensation,³ the objection that the compensation is unascertainable is, as has been already in substance observed, one which the Court is unwilling to entertain; and it grants relief with compensation in many cases in which the ascertainment of the amount to be paid cannot be said to be certain or exact, but only the reasonable estimate from the evidence of competent persons; as, for instance, where compensation was granted for the existence in a stranger of a right to dig coals in the land sold.⁴

Enforcement of contract inequitable.

§ 1279. Again it may, it is conceived, be laid down generally that, wherever the Court sees that the enforcement of the contract with compensation would be unjust or unfair, or would disappoint the reasonable § 1280. Thus, where an estate which really contained only 11,814 acres was, by a bonâ fide mistake of the vendor's agent, described in the contract as containing 21,750 acres, and it appeared that the vendor had accepted the price on a computation of the rental of the estate, Lord Romilly M.R. considered that to force him to sell the estate for little more than half the price contracted for would be a hardship, and that the case was one of mistake; and he accordingly held that the purchaser might, at his option, either take the actual quantity at the contract price or have the contract rescinded, but that he was not entitled to specific performance with an abatement for the deficiency of acreage.¹ Instance.

if made at all, be made, is a question that may obviously in many cases be very important.

§ 1284. There is, it is conceived, no doubt that the Court will enforce compensation, at any time before the completion of the transaction by the execution of the conveyance and the payment of all the purchase-money, in respect of any matter, the fit subject of compensation, which has arisen before that time, and whether before or after the conclusion of the contract. Thus, where an estate was sold as tithe free, and, after a claim had been started by the incumbent of one parish, the conveyance was executed, but a part of the purchase-money was set aside as an indemnity against this claim: the claim came to nothing, but, before the indemnity fund was transferred, it appeared that the land was in another parish, and was subject to tithe to its incumbent: it was held, on a bill filed by the purchaser, that he was entitled to compensation in respect of these tithes out of the fund.¹

Deterioration.

§ 1285. And on the same principle the Court will allow compensation for deterioration which may have occurred in the value of the estate, between the time when the contract ought to have been completed by the vendor, and the time when he does in fact make out the title,² whether it have arisen by the wilful default or merely by the negligence of the vendor or his tenants.³ Thus, where stone had been subtracted from a quarry pending a suit for the specific performance of a contract to grant a license to work it, compensation was obtained by means of a supplemental bill.⁴

§ 1286. Whether, after conveyance has been executed and purchase-money paid, the Court still has jurisdiction to enforce compensation, is a question on which there has been some conflict of judicial opinion.¹ It appears that rights to compensation under the contract may exist even after the conveyance and payment have been executed and made;² and, wherever such rights exist, they may, it would seem, now be asserted in the same action as that in which specific performance is claimed. Where the contract gives no right to compensation the case is, of course, different.³

§ 1287. The language of the condition must of course have an important effect on the subjects for compensation under any particular contract, and in every case serves at least to indicate the nature of the matters in respect of which, and the circumstances under which, both parties intended that the purchaser should have a right to compensation. But the purchaser is not, it is conceived, bound to show that the subject-matter of his claim is of a kind expressly embraced by the words of the condition: except in so far as there may be anything in the contract excluding his claim, or empowering the vendor to defeat it—which are matters to be determined according to the ordinary rules of construction⁴—he is entitled not merely to the right expressly given to him by the condition, but to the full measure of relief applicable to the case according to the general principles already discussed: in other words, his right to compensation

§ 1288. In accordance with a principle already stated,¹ it has been held, in cases decided before and also since the passing of the Judicature Acts, that a condition for compensation may be enforced notwithstanding that the conveyance has been executed. In Cann v. Cann,² Shadwell V.C. decided that the right of the purchaser to receive compensation, under such a condition, for a misstatement (discovered after possession taken) in the particulars as to the value of the property was not at all affected by the circumstances of his having paid the whole of the purchase-money into Court and taken a conveyance. Subsequently the Court of Exchequer unanimously adopted the same view:³ and the jurisdiction has again been emphatically asserted, upon a full consideration of the authorities, by Jessel M.R. in a case in which his Lordship held a purchaser entitled to the benefit of a condition for compensation, in respect of a deficiency of acreage discovered by measurement after the execution of the conveyance.⁴

Ch. ii.

§ 1290. In consonance with the general principles on which the Court deals with conditions of sale,¹ its tendency is to put a liberal and comprehensive construction upon conditions giving compensation to a purchaser, and a strict one upon any which limit his right to it. Construction of conditions for compensation.

§ 1291. Thus, where by an innocent mistake the particular described part of the estate as customary leasehold renewable every twenty-one years, whereas in fact there was no such custom to renew; the fourth condition of sale empowered the vendor to vacate the sale upon objection taken to the title, and another condition stipulated that if, through any mistake, the estate should be improperly described, or any error or misstatement should be inserted in the particular, such error or misstatement should not vitiate the sale, but the vendor or purchaser should pay or allow compensation for it; Lord Hatherley (then Wood V.C.) held that the misstatement fell within the condition for compensation, and further that it was not an objection to title, within the meaning of the fourth condition, enabling the vendor to vacate the sale.² Painter v. Newby.

§ 1292. And where land was described in the particulars as containing 753 square yards, whereas it actually contained only 573 square yards, and one of the conditions provided that if any error, misstatement, or omission in the particulars should be discovered, the same should not annul the sale, nor should any compensation be allowed by the vendor or purchaser in respect thereof, it was held by Malins V.C. Considerable deficiency of area.

255, where there was no stipulation for compensation: so far as it may be inconsistent with Palmer v. Johnson, it cannot be considered as law.

that such a condition must be construed as intended to cover small unintentional errors and inaccuracies, but not to cover reckless and careless statements, and that so large a deficiency as 180 square yards out of 753 did not come within the condition; and that the purchaser was therefore entitled to compensation.¹

No allowance for deficiency.

§ 1293. Where, however, the conditions stipulated that (α) the admeasurements should be presumed to be correct, but if any error were discovered therein, no allowance should be made or required either way; (β) if any error of any kind were made in the description of the premises such error should not invalidate the sale, but a fair compensation should be given or taken; and (γ) if the purchaser should make any objection as to compensation or otherwise which the vendor should be unwilling to remove or comply with, the vendor should be at liberty to vacate the sale: and the area of the property, stated in the particulars to be 7683 square yards, was found by the purchaser upon actual admeasurement to be only 4350 square yards: and the vendor before suit offered to vacate the contract, but the purchaser refused the offer and insisted upon the performance of the contract with compensation for the deficiency: Lord Westbury held that the right of the purchaser must be determined by the operation of the conditions read in connection with one another, and that, though the Court probably would not, at the vendor's instance, have enforced the condition as to erroneous admeasurement where the error was so great, the purchaser could not, in the face of that condition, have an allowance for the deficiency of area.²

to have been made in the description of the property or the vendor's interest therein, it shall not annul the sale, but shall be the subject of compensation, at the same time provide that, if any objection is persisted in, the vendor may rescind the contract, then, if the purchaser persists in a claim for compensation which really involves an objection to the title, the vendor may rescind the contract, and, if he does, the Court will not afterwards give the purchaser any relief in respect of the condition for compensation.¹

§ 1295. Another illustration of the principle that a purchaser's right to claim compensation may be abrogated, notwithstanding a condition for compensation, by the operation of another term of the contract, is afforded by the case of Williams v. Edwards.² There A. had contracted to sell to B. certain freehold property, and the contract contained a stipulation that errors in the description of the premises should not vacate the contract, but a reasonable abatement or equivalent should be made or given, but it was also stipulated that, if B.'s Counsel should be of opinion that a marketable title could not be made at the time appointed for the completion of the purchase, the contract should be void and be delivered up to be cancelled; and B.'s Counsel was of opinion that a good title could be made only to two-thirds, and that one-third was held for a life only: the purchaser insisted on specific performance with compensation; but it was refused, because the contract was by its special terms void under the circumstances.

were arbitrary, and also that the clear profits of the manor for the last eight years had averaged 150% a year; and one of the conditions of sale provided for compensation being given for errors and misstatements. It turned out that by the custom of the manor only one class of fines was arbitrary; but that the clear profits of the manor exceeded 200% a year. Their Lordships refused to give the purchaser compensation for the misstatement as to the fines, considering that, reading the statements in the particulars as a whole, there had been no substantial misrepresentation: but it was intimated in the speeches of Lord Brougham and Lord Cottenham¹ that, if the misstatement as to the fines had been a substantial one, the impossibility of computing the proper amount of compensation would have prevented its being given.²

Damages.

§ 1297. Damages may be said to be a species of compensation, inasmuch as they are awarded in order to make good to the purchaser some loss or expense which he has suffered or been put to in connection with the contract, but they are so distinct a form of relief that they may most conveniently be discussed in a separate chapter.³

CHAPTER III.

OF DAMAGES.

§ 1298. In early times, the Court of Chancery did not entirely disclaim jurisdiction in respect of damages, where they were incident to the subject-matter already in contention before the Court.¹ Subsequently the jurisdiction was disowned, and a broad distinction set up between compensation and damages, the extent and measure of the one being regarded as different from that of the other, so that (to follow the illustration given by Lord Eldon) if A. contracted to sell to B. an estate tithe free, and B. contracted to sell it to C. on the same conditions, and it was found that A. could not convey tithe free, he might be compelled by the Court to make compensation for the difference in the value of the property, but not for the damage sustained by B. from being unable to complete his contract with C.²

Ch. iii.

Distinction between compensation and damages.

§ 1299. However, in a case which came before the Lords Justices in the year 1855, the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery to award damages for the want of a literal performance of a contract which it had directed to be specifically performed was re-asserted. "It is the constant course of the Court," said Turner L.J., "in the case of vendor and purchaser, where a sufficient case is made for the purpose, to make an inquiry as to the deterioration of the estate, and in so doing, the Court is, in truth, giving damages to the purchaser for the loss sustained by the contract not having been literally performed.”¹

Lord
Cairns’
Act.

§ 1300. In the year 1858 an express power of awarding damages in cases of specific performance was conferred upon the Court of Chancery by the Chancery Amendment Act of that year² (commonly called Lord Cairns’ Act), whereby it was enacted (section 2) that, in all cases in which the Court of Chancery then had jurisdiction to entertain an application for the specific performance of any contract, it should be lawful for the same Court, if it should think fit, to award damages to the party injured either in addition to or in substitution for such specific performance; and that such damages might be assessed in such manner as the Court should direct.

It is to be noticed that the jurisdiction given by this enactment is a discretionary one, and enables the Court to deprive a suitor of what would otherwise be his right to specific performance.

Condition
precedent to jurisdiction
under that Act.

§ 1301. It was—as indeed the language of the second section of Lord Cairns’ Act clearly shows—a condition precedent to the Court of Chancery’s awarding damages under that Act that the plaintiff should show himself to have been entitled, at the time when he commenced his suit, to some equitable relief of the nature specified in that section.³ Accordingly where a plaintiff prayed for the performance of an alleged contract by a company to allot shares to him, and also, if all the shares had been allotted to other persons, for damages, and it appeared that all the shares had been allotted before the filing of the bill, it was held that, specific performance having from the first been impossible, the claim for damages also failed.¹

PART V.
Ch. iii.

§ 1302. It is apprehended that where damages are awarded under this Act in substitution for specific performance, the measure of damages would be the same as in an action at common law for breach of the contract.² So, where the damages at common law would be nominal, they would also, it is submitted, be nominal under the statute.

§ 1303. In a case decided by Lord Hatherley (when Wood V.C.), the contract was that the defendant should grant a lease of a paper-mill to M.; that M. should pay 122*l.* for sundry articles on the premises, and should execute sundry improvements; and that, if the defendant should fail to grant a valid lease, he would repay the 122*l.* and all outlay on improvements. M. paid the 122*l.* and expended about 5,000*l.* on the premises; but afterwards, on investigation of the title, it appeared that the defendant could not grant a valid lease according to the contract. Upon bill filed by M. for specific performance, or, if the defendant could not grant a valid lease, for repayment of M.'s outlay and damages, it was argued for the defendant that there could be no specific performance of the contract to grant a lease, that the alternative contract to repay outlay was not a subject for specific performance, and that damages would not be given where specific performance was impossible. But these arguments were repelled by the Judge, who said "There is an implied contract in every case between vendor and purchaser, that the purchaser shall have a lien on the property to the extent of the purchase-money he has paid, and here there is an express stipulation that the money expended shall be repaid. This right will sustain a claim for damages just as much as the right to specific performance of the contract to grant a lease which has dropped by reason of the impossibility of performance."¹

Order for damages
subsequent to decree.

§ 1304. In a case decided in the year 1866, where, after specific performance of a contract had been decreed, certain facts occurred from which it was alleged that damage had arisen to the plaintiffs, Kindersley V.C. held that the Court of Chancery had, under Lord Cairns' Act, no jurisdiction to make after decree, on motion in the cause, an order for assessing damages; inasmuch as such an order would in effect be a supplemental decree founded on what had occurred since the decree was made.²

Effect of Judicature Acts as to damages.

§ 1305. Now, however, the jurisdiction conferred upon the Court of Chancery by Lord Cairns' Act,³ and also all the powers of granting damages which before the passing of the Judicature Acts were exercisable by the Common Law Courts, are by virtue of the Judicature Act, 1873 (ss. 16, 76), vested in the High Court of Justice; and by the last-mentioned Act it is expressly enacted (s. 24 (7)) that the High Court and the Court of Appeal, in the exercise of their respective jurisdictions, in every cause or matter pending before them respectively shall grant, either absolutely or on such reasonable terms as to them shall seem just, all such remedies whatsoever as any of the parties thereto may appear to be entitled to, in respect of any and every legal or equitable claim properly brought forward by them respectively in such cause or matter; so that, as far as possible, all matters so in controversy between the parties may be completely and finally determined, and all multiplicity of legal proceedings concerning any of such matters avoided.

§ 1306. The Court therefore can now give damages in any of the following cases, viz. :—

Present powers
of the Court.

(i.) In substitution for specific performance where there is a case for specific performance,—under Lord Cairns' Act.

(ii.) Where there is no case for specific performance,—under the Judicature Acts.

(iii.) In addition to specific performance in whole or in part,—under Lord Cairns' Act, and probably also under the Judicature Acts.

§ 1307. The plaintiff may now therefore come to the Court and say, give me specific performance, and with it give me damages, or in substitution for it give me damages, or if I am not entitled to specific performance give me damages as at common law by reason of the breach of the agreement.¹ But in order to the exercise of the peculiar jurisdiction under Lord Cairns' Act, the observance of the condition imposed by that statute is, notwithstanding the Judicature Acts, still obligatory upon the Court: and damages in addition to or in substitution for specific performance will be given by virtue of that jurisdiction only when the plaintiff had a case for specific performance at the time when he issued his writ.² Furthermore, the plaintiff cannot succeed on a claim for damages in substitution for specific performance when he has even after the action began disentitled himself to specific performance, as where a vendor after action sold the subject-matter of the contract to a third person.¹

Utility of the jurisdiction in damages.

§ 1308. The Court's jurisdiction in damages is an apt and flexible instrument for doing exact justice under the diverse and complicated circumstances of many of the cases upon which the Court has from time to time to adjudicate.

Loss of profits.

§ 1309. For instance, where the plaintiff contracted with the defendant to take a lease of property belonging to the latter, for the purpose, as he knew, of carrying on a business which the plaintiff intended to carry on there, and, owing to the defendant's wilful refusal to perform his part of the contract, the plaintiff was for fifteen weeks unable to commence his business; the Court, in addition to giving judgment for the specific performance of the contract, awarded 250% to the plaintiff by way of damages, in respect of his loss of profits during the fifteen weeks.²

Suit brought to hearing for damages.

§ 1310. Where the plaintiff was at the time when he filed his bill entitled to specific performance, and also to damages for injury occasioned to him by the defendants' delay of performance, and before the suit could be brought to a hearing the defendants performed the contract; it was held that the plaintiff was nevertheless justified in bringing his suit to a hearing for the damages.³

Partial
performance plus
damages.

§ 1311. Sometimes the Court can best do justice by enforcing the specific performance of one part of the contract and awarding damages for breach of the remainder. Where, for instance, a man contracted to pull down an old house, to rebuild, and to accept a lease of the new building, and then made default in rebuilding, Lord Hatherley (then Wood V.C.) held the intended lessor entitled to have damages for the non-building, and also specific performance of the contract to accept a lease.¹

PART V.
Ch. iii.

§ 1312. Again it may well happen that, though the Court has jurisdiction to enforce the specific performance of a contract, the justice of the case will be better met by awarding damages in substitution. Thus where a railway company contracted with a landowner to "erect set up and construct a station" on land which they had bought from him, but the contract contained no further description of the station, and no stipulation as to the user of it when erected; and the company afterwards refused to erect a station on the agreed site; the Court of Appeal in Chancery, considering that it could not satisfactorily do justice by means of a decree for specific performance, directed that the damage sustained by the landowner by reason of the non-performance of the contract should be ascertained (by an inquiry in Chambers) and the amount paid to him by the company.²

Damages
in substitution for performance.

§ 1313. It may happen that a purchaser finds himself unable to obtain specific performance of a contract owing to some fatal defect in his vendor's title, which was unknown to him (the purchaser) at the time when he entered into the contract. In such a case damages are the only possible form of relief: and the vendor will not be allowed to escape from liability to pay them by purporting to rescind the contract under a condition entitling the vendor to rescind in the event of the purchaser making any objection or requisition in respect of the title which the vendor is unwilling to comply with: for such a condition does not apply to a case where the vendor has not any title at all.¹

of defendant.

§ 1314. Where an action is brought for specific performance, and specific performance is refused on the sole ground of a mistake by the defendant, the Court will now consider the question of damages, and give the same damages as would, under the old practice, have been given in an action at Law.²

Ascertainment of quantum of damages.

§ 1315. Where there was a case for damages, the Court of Chancery sometimes directed an issue to ascertain the amount.³ The more usual course was to direct an inquiry in Chambers as to the sum to be awarded or allowed: and this is still commonly done.⁴ In many cases, however, the damages have been assessed by the Judge himself at the trial, and, where the plaintiff has not been ready with his evidence as to the amount of damages, the trial has been adjourned to give time for it to be obtained. It seems clearly desirable that the assessment of damages should, wherever practicable, take place at the trial, without any separate inquiry: for otherwise the parties are virtually put to the expense of two trials of the same question.⁵

CHAPTER IV.

OF REFERENCE OF TITLE.

§ 1316. WHERE the vendor of land sues the purchaser for a specific performance of the contract, the defendant may, in some cases, succeed in having the action dismissed at the trial, on the ground of a defect in the plaintiff's title, provided the defect in title has been prominently put forward in the pleadings:¹ but where this is not the case, the defendant is entitled to have an inquiry directed as to the title of the vendor to the lands in question. This right is derived from the extraordinary nature of the jurisdiction which the vendor seeks to put in action, in consideration of which the purchaser has a right, not only to have such a title as the vendor offers upon the abstract unauthenticated, but the highest assurance upon the nature of his title which can be acquired for him by the production of deeds, the directing of inquiries, and the sifting of the vendor's conscience.²

PART V.
Ch. iv.
Purchaser
defendant.

Hence it follows that, though the purchaser may admit that he has only one particular objection,³ or no objection at all⁴ to the title, he is equally entitled to a general reference as to it.

§ 1317. Still whenever, in a judgment decreeing the specific performance of a contract, an inquiry whether the vendor can make a good title is directed in general terms, it must be understood to mean a good title according to the terms of the contract: but if the vendor wishes to prevent the renewal, under the inquiry, of objections waived before the action, he should guard himself by establishing such waiver at the trial, and taking care that the judgment expressly recognizes it: for under a general inquiry as to title the Court will not enter into any question of such waiver.¹

Pur-chaser's costs disallowed.

§ 1318. However, where a purchaser allowed the vendor's suit for specific performance to proceed to the point of the inquiry as to title, before bringing forward an objection which was patent on the face of the abstract originally delivered, he was not allowed his costs of the inquiry, though the objection was fatal to the title.¹

Vendor
cannot except.

§ 1319. The right to the reference is that of the purchaser, and the vendor cannot except to the title, so as to assert his own title to be bad.²

Purchaser
plaintiff.

§ 1320. The purchaser is also entitled to a reference of title where he is plaintiff in an action for specific performance; but inasmuch as in this case it is he, and not the vendor, who is calling on the Court to act, he does so at his own risk; and therefore, if he knows of objections and asks for a reference, and then waives the objections, he will have to bear the costs of investigating the title.³ And it would seem that the same result must follow where the effect of a reference is to show that the vendor had at the due time disclosed to the purchaser a perfect title.⁴

In respect of what
contracts

§ 1321. The right to this reference is not confined to sales of real estate, but extends to any species of property with regard to which the Court may entertain an action for specific performance, and the nature of which renders such an inquiry proper. Accordingly, inquiries have been directed into the title of vendors to shares in railway companies,¹ and in mining concerns.² The nature of the inquiry, of course, varies according to the nature of the property, and the essentials of a good title to it.

the right exists.

§ 1322. But there are necessarily many contracts in respect of which no such inquiry is or can be made. Where the contract is not for the sale of any property, such a reference is of course out of the question. And so, too, where a contract is rather in the nature of a compromise of disputed rights than of a contract for sale, the Court will not make the inquiry.³ In a case where a small piece of land was described as held of certain commissioners of waste lands at a rent of six shillings, it was doubted whether a purchaser could call on a vendor for the title of the commissioners.⁴

Where
reference not directed.

§ 1323. The Court will not direct an inquiry where, though the contract be one of sale, the vendor only sells such interest as he has:⁵ such a contract is, of course, perfectly valid, but, being in restraint of the purchaser's implied right to a good title, it must be made clear and unambiguous to the purchaser.⁶ A vendor may, of course, stipulate that a purchaser shall take such title as he himself bought with.⁷

vendor's title without dispute, he was held to be debarred from taking an objection on account of an incumbrance which left the legal estate outstanding.¹ So, again, where conditions of sale of a fee-farm rent stated that no evidence should be required of the receipt, or payment, or existence of the ground-rent, other than that disclosed by a conveyance mentioned, and that no objection should be taken to the title in consequence of the non-payment or non-receipt of the said rent, and the purchaser objected that the rent had not been paid for twenty years, and so was extinguished, and that there was therefore no subject-matter of the contract, and therefore no contract; the Court held that the purchaser had by the contract taken on himself the chance of being able to substantiate his claim to the rent.²

Best v.
Hamand.

§ 1325. The case of *Best v. Hamand*³ is a remarkable instance of the upholding of such a stipulation. There, the subject-matter of the contract being land which the vendor had bought from a railway company as superfluous land, the contract contained a stipulation that the purchaser should assume and admit that everything (if anything were necessary) was done and performed by the company to enable them to sell and effectually convey the land as surplus land, and should not call for or require production of any evidence to that effect. The vendor all along knew (as appeared from the abstract and replies to requisitions) that the statutory offer of preemption had not been made to the adjoining owners; but the Court of Appeal nevertheless held that the purchaser was bound by the stipulation;—to the extent, at any rate, that his refusal to abide by the stipulation was a breach of the

Where the vendor was entitled to one undivided third in a leasehold interest in certain collieries, and the purchaser to another undivided third under the same title, and the contract was for an assignment of the vendor's share and interest in the collieries; the contract was held to be for the sale of the vendor's share and not of the land, and the vendor was held not liable to show the lessor's title.²

Contract for assignment of vendor's share.

§ 1327. The vendor may generally by express stipulation, as we have seen, entirely exclude any inquiry into his title. But he will not be allowed to fall back upon such a stipulation in support of a misleading condition of a sale;³ and where, the contract containing such a stipulation, the purchaser at first under a mistake common to both parties accepted the title, but on discovering the mistake objected to complete, it was held that his objection was not precluded by the stipulation.⁴

Misleading condition.

§ 1328. Or the vendor may take a middle course, and, without excluding, may limit the inquiry. He may, for instance, exclude all objections in respect of a particular instrument,⁵ or all objections to title earlier than a certain deed,⁶ or he may sell merely an equitable and not a legal estate.⁷

PART V.
Ch. iv.

The cases fall into two categories.

§ 1329. The cases on the question whether and how far the inquiry into title has been limited fall into two categories; first, where the stipulations of the contract preclude the purchaser from making requisitions upon or inquiries from the vendor as to his title,—which relieves the vendor from the necessity of complying with or answering any such requisition or inquiry, but does not prevent the purchaser from showing, by any means in his own power, that the vendor's title is defective; and secondly, cases in which the stipulations preclude the purchaser, not only from making such requisitions upon and inquiries from the vendor, but from making any inquiry or investigation about the title anywhere;—which may quite validly be stipulated, and will generally, provided that the stipulation be clear, altogether preclude inquiry and investigation for every purpose.¹

First category illustrated.

§ 1330. Of the first of these categories an illustration may be found in the case of Darlington v. Hamilton,² where there was a stipulation that the lessor's title should not be produced, and the purchaser discovered that the lessor's title was objectionable by reason of its being involved with the title to other property, so that the purchaser would run the risk of being ousted by reason of a breach of covenant in respect of other property; and the Court accordingly refused specific performance.

Second
category.

§ 1331. On the other hand, where the condition provided that the lessors' title should neither be produced nor inquired into,³ and the purchaser offered Acts of Parliament in evidence that the lessors (a public company) had no power to grant leases, the objection was held to be precluded.⁴

³ See now the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, s. 2 (1); infra, § 1374.

⁴ Hume v. Bentley, 5 De G. & Sm.

§ 1332. But conditions restrictive of a purchaser's Common Law rights are, as we have seen,¹ construed very strictly. Thus in Waddell v. Wolfe,² where on a sale of leaseholds held by underlease there was a condition that no requisition or inquiry should be made respecting the title of the lessor, or his superior landlord, or his right to grant the underlease, and the purchaser, in investigating the title, discovered for himself that the lessor had no power to grant the underlease, it was held that the purchaser was not precluded by the condition from insisting on the objection. The Court appears to have considered that the language of the condition pointed only to requisitions and inquiries between vendor and purchaser; so that the case really fell within the principle of Darlington v. Hamilton.³

Defect

chaser

of vendor.

§ 1333. Again, in Smith v. Robinson,⁴ the defendant having in 1877 agreed to purchase freehold property, subject to a condition that the abstract should commence with a deed dated in 1867, and that no earlier or other title should be required or inquired into by the purchaser, there happened to be, among the muniments handed to the defendant's solicitor for comparison with the abstract, a deed, of the existence of which the vendor was then ignorant, which threw grave doubt on the title; and it was held that, the objection having arisen not from any requisition or inquiry by the purchaser but from the vendor's own disclosure, the condition did not apply.

a good title is made in accordance with such conditions.¹

§ 1335. Accordingly, in the case of *Re Banister*² already referred to, although the purchaser was relieved against a misleading condition, still, as the conditions professed on their face to give only a good holding title, the reference was confined to ascertaining whether such a title could be made out.³ So, again, where at the time of the written contract (an open one) being signed, the purchaser verbally agreed to take a limited title, and negotiations went on for a long time upon that footing, the Court at the hearing limited the inquiry as to title accordingly.⁴ And where A. contracted with B. for a lease, B. knowing the purposes for which A. wanted the house, and A. knowing that B.'s title was merely leasehold, a reference was directed having regard to the covenants in the lease, and the purposes for which the premises were taken.⁵

tion not to dered.

§ 1336. Where a decree has been made for specific performance and the question is one of title, the Court has to consider only the question whether the title shown is in accordance with the contract, and cannot enter upon the question of the hardship imposed by any of the conditions as to title or the question whether such conditions would have furnished a defence to the action.⁶

Waiver of the right.

§ 1337. Generally, either vendor or purchaser has a right to have the inquiry in question,—the one being entitled to an opportunity of perfecting, and the other of investigating the title. But there may be, on the part of either of them, a waiver of the right.

PART V.
Ch. iv.

§ 1338. Thus, if the vendor states his title, and conclusively avers that he can make no other or better title, and the title disclosed is objected to by the purchaser, the Court may decide without a reference;¹ but if in such a case the decision were in favour of the vendor, it seems that the purchaser would then be entitled to call for a reference.

By vendor.

§ 1339. But it is with regard to a waiver by the purchaser that this question more often arises: for a purchaser originally entitled to examine the vendor's title may subsequently waive that right, either expressly or by implication; and this waiver may be either as to the whole title or limited to parts:² and in case of an express waiver, it may be either absolute or conditional.³

By purchaser.

§ 1340. An admission of title by a defendant in his pleading is an express waiver, which excludes the right to a reference of title: for this purpose it is enough if the defendant pleads belief that at the time of the contract the plaintiff had a title;⁴ or even if, the plaintiff having pleaded the facts constituting his title, they are not denied (specifically or by necessary implication), or stated to be not admitted, in the pleading of the defendant.⁵

Express waiver.

§ 1341. But this waiver, where not express, must be clearly implied from the acts of the purchaser. "The Court," said Lord Eldon, "will at least take care that, where it is contended that the defendant has waived his right to a reference, it shall be clear that there was no surprise upon him, and that there has been a full and fair representation as to the title on the part of the plaintiff:"¹ and so where the vendor relies on any dealings in respect of the abstract as a waiver of objections to title, the contents of the abstract must raise the objection in question clearly and explicitly, and not merely by inference or notice.²

objections.

§ 1342. It is often the case that there is only a particular objection to the title that is of moment, and it is then frequently a question whether the purchaser has not waived all right to object to it.

Classification of the cases.

§ 1343. The cases thus fall into three classes: (i.) those of acts done by the purchaser after the objection is known to him, the objection being in its nature curable; (ii.) those of similar acts where the defect is incurable; and (iii.) those of acts before the objection is known to the purchaser. It is evident that under the last we may treat of the question of a general waiver of title.

i. Where the objection is known and curable.

§ 1344. (i.) Where the defect, though known, is yet one which it is, or may be, in the power of the vendor to remedy, acts which indicate an intention to complete may yet not amount to a waiver, because they may be done in the faith and expectation that the remedy will be applied. And a negotiation about the objection between the parties after the acts is, on this principle, an evidence that it was not waived.³

ii. Where known and incurable.

§ 1345. (ii.) But where the defect is known to the purchaser, and is in its nature incurable, there no such expectation can arise, and much slighter acts will operate as indications of an intention to waive the objection.⁴ So where an estate, sold as freehold and leaseholds attached, turned out to be nearly all leasehold, and this clearly appeared as a defect which could not be cured, and the purchaser continued to treat, up to and long after the day for concluding the purchase, on points of title irrespective of this objection; he was held to have waived it.¹ So where an estate was subject as to part to a reservation of rights of sporting, which appeared on the abstract, and which the vendor could not cure, and after the delivery of the abstract the purchaser took possession; he was held to have waived his right to object to the reservation in question.² And where the invalidity of a fiat on which the title depended was known to the purchaser, his granting a lease of the property was held a waiver.³ Again, where the defect alleged was an erroneous and misleading description of the situation of a house, but the purchaser had proceeded to investigate the title after this was known, he was held to have waived all objection on the score of misdescription.⁴

§ 1346. So with regard to the contract itself—if the defendant contends that it is a nullity, and, after having become aware of the facts on which he relies for this contention, has gone on acting as though there were a subsisting contract, he will be estopped from subsequently taking the objection.⁵

treated as subsisting.

§ 1347. Where, either by the terms of the original contract, or by a subsequent arrangement, it is agreed that the purchaser shall take possession and shall be entitled to a good title, no waiver is worked by the possession, or by any acts which do not go beyond the acts of a person entrusted with the possession and bound to take care of the estate. So where a person purchased a share in some iron-works to which a good title was to be made in about a year, and it appeared to be the intention of both parties that the purchaser should previously take possession and act as partner, his doing so was no waiver of his right to a good title.¹

Possession
taken with vendor's consent.

§ 1348. In *Burroughs v. Oakley*² the original contract was silent as to possession, but possession having been taken by the purchaser, and both parties having for more than a year subsequently continued negotiating as to title, Plumer M.R. concluded that possession was prematurely taken with the consent of both parties, but without an intention of waiving the investigation of title: and so where a purchaser took possession, with the vendor's leave, pending an answer to a requisition as to the tenure of the property, he was held to have not thereby waived the requisition.³

iii. Acts of ownership.

§ 1349. (iii.) Acts of ownership on the part of a purchaser may amount, in the contemplation of the Court, to a declaration that he considers himself as the owner of the property, and then they work an acceptance of title and a waiver of all objections; or secondly, such acts, though falling short of this, may yet, by changing the property which is subject to the vendor's lien, affect that security, and therefore furnish a motive to the Court to order the payment into Court of the purchase-money.⁴

Such acts must be strong and distinct.

§ 1350. It is obvious that, for acts to amount to the waiver of an objection before it is known, they must be very strong and distinct,⁵—such acts, in short, as are equivalent to a declaration by the purchaser that he has taken the estate at all possible risks, and considers himself as the absolute and unconditional owner of it, and so preclude any investigation of title at all. Therefore in a case where the objections were not known, the stubbing up of an osier-bed and filling up a pond, though held to justify an order for payment of the purchase-money into Court, and for a receiver, were not held to amount to a waiver of title.¹ If when possession is taken the purchaser knows of the objection and that it cannot be remedied by the vendor, such possession will generally at least be a waiver. But the same will not necessarily result when the defect is one which the purchaser can cure.²

§ 1351. Leaving the abstract unobjected to for two years, altering the property, letting it, and apologizing for not paying the purchase-money, which was of course only payable if the title was accepted, have been considered strong acts of waiver.³ And where the purchaser was in possession twenty years, and, after making frivolous objections and refusing any further explanation of them, still continued in possession, the right to investigate title was held to have been waived.⁴ The like was held in a case where a purchaser continued twenty-six years in possession after his requisitions of title were sent in, and had paid a considerable part of his purchase-money, and made alterations.⁵ In another case, Lord Romilly M.R. expressed an opinion that the purchaser, having retained the abstract for five months and made no objections to the title, but simply got the vendor to verify the abstract with the title-deeds, had thereby waived all objections as to title.⁶ And where the purchasers of a leasehold interest, after investigating and accepting the vendor's title, delayed completion on the ground that they had since discovered an ancient lease, which they suggested (but did not attempt to prove) would override the vendor's interest;

they were held to have lost the right to make any inquiry on the subject.¹

Waiver
by silence of subsequent
contract.

§ 1352. The right of investigation may sometimes be waived by the silence of a subsequent contract concerning it. Thus where, by a contract for the sale of an estate, the purchaser was entitled to evidence that the buildings were not on the copyhold part of the property, which, except to that extent, the vendor was not to be called on to distinguish from the freehold; the purchaser asked for evidence of the identity of the parcels in the abstract with the estate sold: subsequently, by a supplemental contract, the purchaser accepted the title, subject to the production of a declaration of the identity of the parcels in the deeds and the lands sold,—which was produced and approved on the purchaser's behalf: and he subsequently objected that the buildings were on the copyhold part of the estate: it was held that this term of the original contract had been waived by the silence on that head of the supplemental one.²

Acts not a waiver.

§ 1353. On the other hand, the mere acquiescence of both parties in not enforcing the completion of the contract,³ the continuing a treaty and at the same time insisting on the objection,⁴ and the approval of the title by the purchaser's Counsel,⁵ have all been held insufficient to waive the purchaser's right to investigate the title of the vendor.

Waiver of lessor's
title.

§ 1354. By the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, s. 2 (1), it is enacted that (subject to any stipulation to the contrary in the contract) under a contract to grant or assign a term of years, whether derived or to be derived out of a freehold or leasehold estate, the intended lessee or assign shall not be entitled to call for the title to the freehold. This provision does not preclude the purchaser from showing aliunde that the title is bad.¹ But in cases where the purchaser of a lease still has a right to inquire into the title of the lessor, conduct may waive that right which does not waive the right as to the title of the lessee.

PART V.
Ch. iv.

§ 1355. So where B. contracted with A. to take an assignment of a lease when executed, and inspected the lease and the assignment of it to A., and subsequently directed A. to cause an assignment to himself to be endorsed totidem verbis, he was held to be precluded from calling for the lessor's title.² Again, where a purchaser, after transmission to him of the original lease, prepared a draft assignment, and made various objections as to repairs and other matters, but did not require the production of the lessor's title, it seems that he would have been held to have waived the right, but the point was not decided.³ And in a case which came before Lord Cranworth, he, affirming a decision of Stuart V.C., held that joining in a valuation, advertising the property to be disposed of, and other like acts on the part of the lessee, which implied that nothing remained to be done but the execution of the lease, amounted to a waiver of his right to call for the lessor's title.⁴

Instances.

§ 1356. In analogy with the distinction established by the above cases on conditions of sale as to the lessor's title, it is established that acts may amount to a waiver of a right to investigate the title, and yet not compel the purchaser to take it, if it come out collaterally that the vendor has no title. Thus, in *Warren v. Richardson*¹ the purchaser of a leasehold interest had done acts which the Court, at the hearing, held to be a waiver of the right to investigate the title; but it appearing on the report of the Master, to whom it was referred to settle the lease and to state any special circumstances, that the vendor held this together with other leasehold property under one lease, and subject to one proviso for re-entry, so that the vendor, who was plaintiff, could not make a good title; the Court refused to enforce the completion of the contract on the defendant.

Defect
cured by pur-chaser's
own act.

§ 1357. Where the purchaser, having discovered a material defect in the title in the course of his investigation of it, gave notice to determine the contract, and immediately afterwards bought up the interest which had constituted his objection, it was held that, having thus by his own voluntary act cured the defect, he could not avail himself of this purchase for the purpose of destroying the original contract; and specific performance was decreed against him.²

Pleading
waiver.

§ 1358. With regard to the proper mode of pleading that the right to investigate the title has been waived, it was decided by Knight Bruce (then V.C.) in Clive v. Beaumont,³ that it was not enough for the party relying on such waiver to allege facts from which it is a legal inference; but that he must allege the facts and that there had thereby been such waiver. And this seems to be the proper course under the present practice of the High Court.⁴

The present practice is regulated by general orders which will shortly be stated, and it does not therefore appear necessary to state in detail the former practice of the Court of Chancery as to the time of directing this inquiry.

§ 1360. The inquiry as to title is now, it is conceived, obtainable either under Ord. XXXIII., rule 2, which provides that the Court or a Judge may, at any stage¹ of the proceedings in a cause or matter, direct any necessary inquiries to be made, notwithstanding that it may appear that there is some special or further relief sought for, or some special issue to be tried, as to which it may be proper that the cause or matter should proceed in the ordinary manner; or, in an appropriate case, under the 6th rule of Order XXXII., providing that any party may, at any stage of a cause or matter where admissions of fact have been made either on the pleadings or otherwise, apply to the Court or a Judge for such order as, upon such admissions,² he may be entitled to, without waiting for the determination of any other question between the parties. . . . And the Court or a Judge may, upon such application, make such order as the Court or Judge may think just.³

inquiry for title directed as early as possible. "In almost every case," said James L.J.,¹ "it is the duty of a vendor, where there is no question but that of title between him and the purchaser, to avail himself of the opportunity of having an immediate reference as to title and so saving the multiplication of unnecessary costs."

Inquiries
as to matters connected with title.
When good title shown.

§ 1362. The order for reference is not necessarily confined to an inquiry whether a good title can be made, but may extend to everything that appears to be connected with the title.² It should therefore include an inquiry as to the time at which a good title was shown,³ unless for some reason stated at the time—e.g., that the contract itself,⁴ or the plaintiff's right to specific performance,⁵ has been disputed—and by the express direction of the Court, this inquiry is omitted.⁶ As this inquiry, if to be made at all, should be directed at the original reference, the Court has refused to direct it subsequently on a second motion.⁷

Other
matters.

§ 1363. On the same principle, the inquiry may extend to whether it appeared by the abstract that a good title could be made:⁸ and on the like ground, an inquiry was in one case added whether the defendant objected at any time to the want of evidence as to the identity of the premises; but an inquiry whether the abstract was perfect, and if deficient, in what respects, and whether it was ever perfected, was considered to § 1364. The inquiry may be limited in any manner appropriate to the circumstances of the particular case, as, for instance, by directing that regard is to be had to, or that the inquiry is to be made subject to, specified requisitions or declarations.²

limited.

§ 1365. In Harnett v. Baker,³ the Court (Malins V.C.), having come to the conclusion that a condition of sale restrictive of the title was not binding on the purchaser, on the ground that it was founded on an erroneous statement of facts which the vendor was bound to know was erroneous, held that the vendor (plaintiff) must either take an open reference of title (which he refused), or have his bill dismissed with costs.

Harnett
v. Baker.

§ 1366. The inquiry is whether the vendor can make a good title, not whether he could do so at the date of the contract; and therefore, when once the inquiry has been directed,⁴ he may make out his title at any time before the certificate, and if he can do so he will be entitled to a judgment or order in his favour,⁵ at least where there has been no unreasonable delay, and time is not material.⁶

When the § 1367. The Court of Chancery often allowed time for the completion of the title: in an old case it more than once allowed the vendor time to get an Act of Parliament;⁷ and where upon the face of the contract it appeared that there was a difficulty in the plaintiff's title, Lord Hatherley (then Wood V.C.) refused on demurrer to stop a suit for specific performance, on the ground that the Act of Parliament contemplated had not been obtained.¹ So, in another case, the Court allowed the vendor time to procure a small part of the estate;² and, in another case, allowed a limited time to procure the concurrence of an assignee in insolvency.³

§ 1368. The Court grants indulgence in point of time for getting over any difficulties in matters of conveyance, as much where the vendor is the plaintiff, as where the proceedings are instituted by the purchaser.⁴

Time not allowed.

§ 1369. But this indulgence will not be granted where the defect to be remedied was known to the vendor or his agent, and was concealed from the purchaser;⁵ nor where there has been great delay, and there is no probable chance of the difficulty being got over in a short time;⁶ so that a purchaser under the Court would be discharged if it appeared requisite to his title that an account should first be taken in an action to be instituted,⁷ or that an action should be instituted to try whether certain devisees were trustees for the seller or not.⁸ It must be borne in mind too that a purchaser discovering that a vendor has no title or power to convey the estate, or require it to be conveyed, may, at his election, refuse to have anything more to do with the contract.⁹

§ 1370. Nor will the Court grant additional time where the vendor proposes, not to cure a defect in the title which he had at the sale, or to produce fresh evidence in support of it, but to get an entirely new title: for the Court will not force a buyer to take an estate from a vendor who is neither owner of it, nor possessed of the power by the ordinary course of legal proceedings to make himself so;¹ for it is not the purpose of the Court to enable one man to sell another man's estate.² As to this point, it was in one case decided that a title from possession defeasible by the Crown on account of the alienage of the original owner, cured by a grant from the Crown whilst the question was in the Master's office, was the same title, and the purchaser was compelled to take it.³ And the fact that the vendor may have had no title to a small part of the estate at the time of sale, and subsequently purchases it, will not make the title a new one within this rule.⁴

§ 1371. But even where the vendor has no title at all at the time of sale, so that the purchaser may withdraw if he choose, yet, if he acquiesce in steps taken by the vendor to get in the estate, he will thereby have waived the want of mutuality, and be bound to accept the title, if made out at the trial or other necessary time.⁵

Evidence.

§ 1373. Evidence by affidavit of matters of fact material to the title is admissible under a reference of title.¹ Accordingly where, under such a reference, after the conveyancing Counsel had given his opinion in favour of the title, but before the certificate had been actually signed, a very serious defect of title, not in any way disclosed or raised by the abstract, was discovered by the purchaser's inspecting the property, evidence of the matters so discovered was admitted.²

Vendor
and Purchaser Act, 1874,
s. 9.

§ 1374. Whatever can be done in Chambers upon a reference as to title under a judgment where the contract is established, can be done upon proceedings under the ninth section of the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, already referred to.³ That Act enables the parties in such cases to dispense with the formal pleadings of an action, and at once to put themselves in Chambers in exactly the same position in which they would have been, and with all the rights which they would have had, under the old form of decree.⁴

Form of certificate.

§ 1375. The certificate should, it seems, be on the fact of title aye or no: and accordingly it is improper to certify that a defendant with the concurrence of a third party could make a good title,⁵ or that he could do so subject to the performance of certain conditions;⁶ but where the certificate is against the title, it should state the precise points in which it is defective.⁷

PART V.
Ch. iv.

§ 1377. If the certificate is in favour of the title, and either no application to discharge or vary it is made, or such application fails, specific performance will generally be ordered at the hearing (original or on further consideration, according to the stage at which the reference was directed,) of the action.² After such an application has failed, it seems that no other objection to the title can be made.³

title.

Under the old practice, where the report was in favour of the title, but the Court thought it too doubtful to force on a purchaser, the Court might dismiss the bill without allowing the exceptions,⁴ and either with⁵ or without⁶ costs, as the Court might think right.

§ 1378. Where the Court varies a certificate in favour of the title,⁷ or refuses to vary one against it,⁸ and the vendor desires to have an opportunity of making out a better title, the certificate is generally, upon the hearing of the application to vary, referred back to Chambers for review;⁹ and the vendor will be allowed a reasonable time within which to remove the objection.¹⁰ On the other hand, when the matter has gone back to Chambers, and a new abstract of title has been delivered, further objections may be brought in.¹¹

back under the old practice.

§ 1379. The Court of Chancery referred back the question of title where the Master (now represented by the chief clerk) was satisfied with evidence of a fact with which the Court was not satisfied, the vendor offering to produce further evidence;¹ also where, by expressing an opinion in favour of some part of the title, the Master had prevented the vendor from showing that the title was good, even supposing that part not to be so.²

Where the report (now the certificate) was against the title, and the defect was cured at the hearing on further directions, the Court of Chancery compelled specific performance,³ without giving time for further proceedings: but if there was a question whether the defect was in part cured, the Court would refer it back to the Master to review his report with the additional circumstances.⁴

PART V.
Ch. iv.

§ 1383. As an ordinary rule, costs are given not to, but against, a vendor up to the time at which he has first shown a good title.² But there is also another general rule, that if a purchaser has taken certain objections to the title of the vendor, and those objections which have been the cause of the litigation are overruled, the vendor will be entitled to his costs, and the purchaser will not escape paying them by reason of some evidence, the want of which was never the subject-matter of dispute between them, not having been supplied until the title was investigated in Chambers.³

Costs.

And where a defendant prevented the plaintiffs (vendors) from obtaining the usual reference as to title on interlocutory motion by setting up defences which, at the hearing, he failed to establish, he was ordered to pay the plaintiffs' costs up to and inclusive of the hearing.⁴

§ 1384. In the inquiry as to the time when a good title was shown is involved the question, what is showing a good title.⁵ In relation to this, two distinctions are to be borne in mind, the one between questions of title and of conveyance, the other between questions of title and of evidence.

What is a good title.

§ 1385. As to the first, the rule was thus stated by Lord Eldon in Lord Braybroke v. Inskip,⁶—"As to the question whether the abstract was complete, the abstract is complete whenever it appears that, upon certain acts done, the legal and equitable estates will be in the purchaser. That may be long before the title can be completed." So that a good title is shown when it appears from the abstract that the vendor has the whole equity, and in what persons the outstanding portion of the legal estate is vested.¹ The acts to be done, of which Lord Eldon speaks, must be confined to acts the performance of which the vendor can enforce in a Court of justice, as, for instance, by calling on a trustee to convey the estate vested in him. Therefore where an estate tail was outstanding in a person who had consented to bar it, but was not in any way a trustee for the vendor, the Court held that the title was not made out till the recovery had been fully perfected.²

Rule laid down in Esdaile v.
Stephenson.

§ 1386. In *Esdaile v. Stephenson*³ Leach V.C., after consultation with Lord Eldon, laid down the rule, "that where a necessary party to the title was neither in Law nor Equity under the control of the vendor, but had an independent interest, unless there was produced to the Master a legal or equitable obligation on the part of the stranger to join in the sale, the Master ought to report against the title; otherwise, where a necessary party to the title was under the legal or equitable control of the vendor, as a mortgagee, where the Master might well report that upon payment of the mortgage a good title could be made."

Illustrations of
the rule.

§ 1387. The rule is further illustrated by other cases. In one, it was held to be no objection to title, that a satisfied term was outstanding in a lunatic against whom no commission had issued, so that there was then no person competent to make the assigning Society v. Holloway*, 13 Ch. D.

ment;¹ and in another case, the legal estate of a moiety of the property was outstanding in a married woman or those claiming under her, but she being under the order of the Court to convey was bound by it, and became absolutely a trustee for the purchaser under the order of the Court: the title was therefore held good, but without prejudice as to the question of conveyance.²

Avarne v. Brown.

§ 1388. It appears to have been considered by Shadwell V.C. to be sufficient if the abstract showed that the outstanding legal estate had been formerly vested in a trustee for the vendor, and that the abstract was then complete, though a supplemental abstract was necessary to trace the legal estate.³ But this decision seems at variance with the rule enunciated by him in the same case, of which one condition is that the abstract must disclose in whom the legal estate is vested, not in whom it was formerly vested. And accordingly Lord Gifford M.R. held that where an abstract only showed that the legal estate had long since been vested in persons who would be trustees for the vendor, but did not show in whom the legal estate was then vested, the defect was one of title and not of conveyance.⁴ In a recent case it has been held that the objection that in proceedings under the Settled Land Act trustees for the purposes of that Act had not been appointed was an objection of conveyance and not of title.⁵

§ 1389. A distinction has also been taken between showing and making a good title. A good title is shown when all the matters essential to the title are stated in the abstract: it is made, when those matters are proved.⁶

tion between evidence and title.

§ 1390. It is evident, further, that there is a distinction to be drawn between matters of title and of the evidence whereby that title is supported. The verification of the abstract may be either the one or the other: thus, the verification of the deeds stated in the abstract is matter of evidence; whilst, on the other hand, the proof of a fact essential to the title, which can only be proved by evidence documentary or oral,—as, for example, the identity of a person, or of parcels apparently different on the deeds,—is a matter of title.¹

CHAPTER V.

OF INTEREST, RENTS, DETERIORATION, AND PAYMENT INTO COURT.

§ 1391. IN the case of every contract of sale, the question arises—At what time does the property in the thing sold pass from the vendor to the purchaser?

PART V.
Ch. v.

The passing of the property in subject-matter of contract.

In the case of a contract for the sale of real or chattel real property in this country, the answer to this question involves important consequences, some of which it is proposed to discuss in the present chapter. It will be convenient, therefore, briefly to consider the effect of such a contract as between the parties to it.

§ 1392. Where such a contract is entered into, the legal estate in the property passes, not by the contract, but only upon and by virtue of the execution of a subsequent formal deed of conveyance.¹ The equitable estate or beneficial ownership, however, passes, as between the contracting parties, by the contract itself² but only sub modo, or, in other words, conditionally upon the contract being ultimately completed by the fulfilment by vendor and purchaser respectively of the mutual obligations imposed on them by the contract.

Difference between the legal and equitable estates.

It follows (it is conceived) that upon the completion of the contract the condition is satisfied, and the vesting of the equitable as well as of the legal estate becomes absolute; but that upon the contract coming to an end in any other way than by completion the equitable estate reverts in the vendor.¹

Ch. v.

Mutual
obligations of the contractors.

§ 1393. It is, then, important to inquire what are the mutual obligations of the parties to a contract of the kind under discussion. It is submitted that, in the absence of express stipulation, they are shortly as follows:—

Vendor's
obligations.

§ 1394. The vendor is bound—

1. To show a good title to the property contracted to be sold.

2. { (α) To take reasonable care of the property,
and
(β) to pay the outgoings, until the purchaser takes, or ought to take, possession of it.

3. Upon being paid the purchase-money, and any interest on it that may have become payable,

(γ) to execute and procure the execution by all other necessary parties (if any) of a proper deed of conveyance vesting the legal estate in the purchaser, and

(δ) to put him in possession of the property.

Vendor
a constructive trustee.

§ 1395. It is in regard of these or some of these obligations that the vendor has been said to be a constructive trustee, or a trustee sub modo, of the estate for the purchaser from the time when the contract is constituted.²

Pur-chaser's obligations.

§ 1396. On the other hand, the purchaser is bound—

1. As soon as either the vendor has shown a good title, or he (the purchaser) has accepted such title as the vendor shows or has,

- () to pay the purchase-money, and any interest on it that may have become payable, and
- (β) to take possession of the property (that the vendor may be relieved from all future liabilities incident to the ownership).

2. To bear the loss resulting from any accidental injury to the property happening after the contract has been constituted.¹

In regard of the first of these obligations the purchaser has been said to be constructively a trustee of the purchase-money for the vendor.²

Purchaser
constructive trustee.

§ 1397. In addition to the above obligations, the contract gives or may give rise to certain liens;—of the vendor for unpaid purchase-money, and of the purchaser for the deposit or other portion of the purchase-money paid before completion: but these really result from the non-performance, in some respect, of the contract, rather than from the contract itself.

Liens.

§ 1398. If the foregoing statement of the obligations of the parties to a contract of the kind under discussion be correct, it follows that, where the contract contains no express stipulation on the point, the transfer of the possession of the estate from vendor to purchaser ought to be contemporaneous with the completion of the contract.

Transfer of possession.

In practice, however, possession is often taken by the purchaser at an earlier date, in pursuance either of an express term of the contract, or of some extrinsic act of, or arrangement between, the parties.

Estate
and price, rents and interest, mutually exclusive.

§ 1399. Now it is obviously inequitable, in the absence of express and distinct stipulation, that either party to the contract should at one and the same time enjoy the benefits flowing from possession of the property and those flowing from possession of the purchase-money. The estate and the purchase-money are things mutually exclusive. "You cannot," said Knight Bruce (then) V.C., in a case arising out of the sale of some slob lands in Chichester harbour, "have both money and mud." And so neither party can at the same time be entitled both to interest and to rents.¹

Application of the above principles.

§ 1400. The general principles laid down in the preceding section of this chapter are of primary importance in determining

(1) the respective rights and liabilities of vendor and purchaser in regard of interest on the purchase-money and the rents and profits and outgoings of the estate :

(2) their respective rights and liabilities in regard of the deterioration of the estate after the constitution of the contract :

(3) the right of the vendor to have unpaid purchase-money paid into Court.

The application of these principles to any particular case of contract may, however, be, and in practice usually is, modified by express stipulations embodied in the contract.

Division
of the subject.

§ 1401. With these preliminary observations it is proposed to consider the rather complicated questions which arise between vendor and purchaser in respect of rents, interest, outgoings, deterioration, and payment into Court, under the following heads; viz.:—

¹ As to manorial fines, see Garrick v. Earl Camden, 2 Cox, 231; Cuddon v. Tite, 1 Giff. 395.

PART V.
Ch. v.

I. Where the vendor is in possession of the estate, either by receipt of the rents or by personal occupation.

II. Where the purchaser is similarly in possession of the estate.

I. Where the vendor is in possession.

§ 1402. Where the contract fixes no time for the completion of the purchase, and is silent as to the rents and interest, there primâ facie the vendor, it is conceived, is entitled to the produce of the purchase-money, in the shape of interest, and the purchaser has a corresponding right to the produce of the estate, in the shape of tenant's rents or occupation rent, as from the time when the contract ought to have been completed and the transfer of possession to have taken place as a part of such completion.¹

No time fixed for completion.

§ 1403. Where, as is usually the case, the contract fixes a time for completion, there primâ facie, and in the absence of stipulation, the time so fixed is the time from which the purchaser is liable to the payment of interest and is entitled to the rents. But this rule must be taken subject to several exceptions.

Time
fixed for completion.

§ 1404. First, where the interest is much more in amount than the rents, and the delay in completion is clearly made out to have been occasioned by the vendor, the Court, to prevent the vendor from gaining an advantage by his own wrong, gives him no interest, but leaves him in possession of the interim rents.² In such cases, the day at which the interchange of properties is treated as taking place is removed from the time fixed for completion to the time at which a good title is first shown.¹

Burton v. Todd.

§ 1405. In one case, where a vendor had retained possession of the whole of the estate and of one-third of the purchase-money for fifteen years, and the delay was wholly due to his wrongful conduct, Plumer M.R., not feeling himself justified in removing the time for the interchange of properties from the time fixed for completion, endeavoured to meet the equity of the case by giving the purchaser the whole of the rents and interest on one-third of the rents in each year from the time of their accruing.²

Title made out in Chambers.

§ 1406. Secondly, where the title is made out in Chambers, the day when the title is made out is the day on which the purchaser comes under an obligation to complete. Hence, up to that day, the vendor is entitled to the rents, and the purchaser to interest on the deposit paid to the vendor; and from that day the purchaser takes the rents and pays the vendor interest on the unpaid balance of the purchase-money.³

Carrodus v. Sharp.

§ 1407. Accordingly where a suit was instituted for the specific performance of a contract to buy a mill, and the decree was made in February, 1854, but a good title was not shown till December of that year, and a question arose as to who was to bear the expenses and outgoings belonging to the mill, and to the repairs and sustentation of the premises and the machinery, Lord Romilly M.R. decided that these must be borne by the vendor up to the time at which a purchaser could prudently take possession, which is the time at which a good title is shown, and after that by the purchaser.¹

PART V.
Ch. v.

§ 1408. Where, however, the title has not been made out till after action brought, but the delay has arisen from the purchaser's raising other points which made the action necessary, then, the delay not being the fault of the vendor, interest will run from the day fixed for completion.²

Action occasioned by purchaser.

§ 1409. Thirdly, where the contract leaves the amount of the purchase-money to be subsequently ascertained, interest will not begin to run until the purchase-money is actually ascertained, notwithstanding that the time fixed by the contract for completion may have arrived before this is done. Thus in a case where the contract provided that the price should be determined by the award of a surveyor, the Court of Appeal in Chancery held that the vendor must pay the outgoings up to the date of the award, and was entitled to interest only as from that date, although the contract also contained a clause providing that the purchase should be completed and the purchase-money paid at a time which, in the events which happened, arrived more than fourteen months before the award was made.³

Purchase-money to be ascertained after contract.

§ 1410. Fourthly, the purchaser is discharged from his prima facie obligation to pay interest on the unpaid purchase-money where the purchase-money has been appropriated by him and has been unproductive,⁴ and notice to this effect has been given by the purchaser to the vendor.⁵ "Where nothing appears to occasion the delay," said Lord Cottenham, "the rule no doubt is, that if the purchaser, who on the face of the contract is under the necessity of paying on a certain day, sets apart his money, and gives notice that it is ready, interest stops from that time, provided it be shown that he made no interest of it."¹ And even in contracts by railway companies taking land under their compulsory powers, where the owner makes default in completing the sale, interest will cease upon appropriation of the purchase-money, with notice that it is unemployed.²

Rents

reserved to vendor.

§ 1411. The general rule which we have been discussing may, of course, be excluded by express stipulation, as where conditions of sale reserved the rents to the vendor, which was held to exonerate the purchaser from the payment of interest on the unpaid purchase-money.³

Delay from any cause whatever.

§ 1412. The contract very commonly contains a condition to the effect that the purchaser shall pay interest from the day appointed for completion from whatever cause the delay may arise. In a case decided in the year 1822, Leach V.C. held that the mere fact of the delay having arisen on the part of the vendor did not release the purchaser from the obligation of such a condition, and that accordingly he was bound to pay interest:⁴ and in a case where the conditions of a sale under the Court stipulated for payment of the purchase-money on a certain day, and that, if from any cause whatever it should not then be paid, interest should be paid at 5% per cent.; and there was great diffi-

However in another case, where there was a stipulation that if, by reason of any unforeseen or unavoidable obstacles, the purchase should not be completed by the day fixed, the purchaser should from that day pay interest at 5*l.* per cent. on his purchase-money and be entitled to the rents, and the vendor did not show a good title till long after the specified day, Leach V.C. held that the stipulation would not make interest run before the time when a good title was shown, but would only affect its rate.²

Monk v.

§ 1414. In the case of De Visme v. De Visme,³ the effect of such conditions was very elaborately considered by Lord Cottenham, and his Lordship held that a condition for the payment, in case of delay, of interest from the day appointed for completion, from whatever cause the delay might have arisen, did not apply to a case of the vendor's own default, but that in that case interest ran only from the time when a good title was shown. "There are two ways," said his Lordship, "in which this case may be met in argument and upon principle. It may either be considered that that which has happened is not within the contract, that is, that the party never did mean to contract that he would pay interest, although he might be prevented from having the benefit of his purchase by the default of the vendor, and in this view it is the ordinary case of doing justice between the parties, an event having arisen which was not expressly provided for by the contract; or it may be considered that interest must be paid upon the purchase-money, according to the terms of the contract, although the vendor has not performed his part of the contract, and the purchaser has been thereby exposed to damage (the damage being the difference between the interest and the annual value of the property), and then, although this is a departure from the terms of the previous contract, which the Court would not regard as a bar to decreeing a specific performance, yet that the Court will in this case regard it, by giving to the purchaser compensation for the loss he has sustained by the non-performance of the whole contract by the vendor.”¹

“My opinion,” said his Lordship, in conclusion,² “is, that the vendors being in default, the delay having been occasioned by their not performing their part of the contract, are not to exact from the purchaser the payment of interest until the time they showed a good title on their abstract: the effect of that is to postpone the day agreed on for the completion of the contract, until the time when the vendors put themselves right, and showed their title to be good on the abstract. The result therefore is, that until that time there would be no demand to be made by the vendors for the payment, and therefore the interest, which was to stand in the place of that payment, had not commenced to run: it did run when they showed a good title, and not before.”

exempting the carrier from liability in respect of leakage and breakage will yet not comprise leakage and breakage caused by his negligence or that of his servants,¹ seem to furnish close analogies with the decision in De Visme v. De Visme.² It is in fact an instance of the general principle, that no man shall take advantage of his own wrong.

§ 1416. Still, the decision in De Visme v. De Visme was an innovation, and the principles which it applied to conditions of the kind now under consideration have not been accepted by co-ordinate authority³ as supplanting the former rule of the Court—which was and, it is conceived, now is, that such conditions are to have effect given to them according to the natural and literal meaning of their words, except only where there is bad faith, vexatious conduct, or gross negligence—in other words, something amounting to wilful default—on the part of the vendor, disentitling him, in the view of the Court, to the benefit of the stipulation.⁴

§ 1417. Therefore delay arising from mere accident, or from something which the vendor could not have guarded against, or from difficulties occasioned by the state of the title, is not enough to exempt the purchaser from the payment of interest in such cases, even though the difficulties may be such as to justify the purchaser in refusing to complete till they are removed.⁵ Indeed, it may fairly be said that the insertion of such a condition in a contract shows that the possibility of delay arising on the vendor's, no less than on the purchaser's, part is from the first contemplated by both parties, and that there can therefore be no hardship on the purchaser in holding him, subject only to the admitted exceptions already mentioned, to the literal performance of the condition.

Instances.

§ 1418. In accordance with the rule stated in the last section but one, it has been held that the fact that a sufficient abstract is not delivered in time will not deprive the vendor of the interest which he has stipulated for:¹ so again in a case where there was a condition of the kind now under discussion, and delay arose from circumstances under which the Court's approbation (which was necessary to the sale) was to be obtained, and neither party was to blame, the vendors were held to be entitled to interest by force of the condition, although the interest greatly exceeded the amount of the rents of the land:² and so where, there being a similar condition in the contract, it became necessary, in order to make a good title, that a suit should be instituted to procure the rectification of the power under which the vendors sold, the purchaser was held bound to pay interest from the day named for completion.³

the purchase-money, and giving the vendor notice that it has been thus appropriated to the purposes of the contract, seems to be at least doubtful.¹ On principle there seems no reason why a contract by A. to pay interest to B. should be satisfied by A.'s placing the money at interest with C., and giving notice of the fact to B. In a recent case, North J. held that the purchaser's obligation to pay interest was not satisfied by having the money standing ready at his bankers, and giving notice of this fact to the vendor.² In another case, however, Bacon V.C. declared that a purchaser could not, under circumstances of undue delay in consequence of the vendor's acts, be required to pay higher interest than that allowed by the bank at which she had deposited the purchase-money.³

§ 1421. The Court will construe a condition fixing the time from which interest is to run in connection with another fixing the time for the delivery of the abstract: so that where there is a condition that the abstract shall be delivered by a certain day, and interest shall begin to run from another and subsequent day, and a perfect abstract is in fact not delivered till after the time fixed for that purpose, interest will not run from the day specified in that behalf, but from a day so long after the actual delivery of a perfect abstract, as the day stipulated for the commencement of interest was after the day stipulated for the delivery of the abstract.⁴

Burnell
v. Brown.

In one case interest at the rate of 5 per cent. was given, where the circumstances did not justify the delay in paying the money, the then Lord Chief Baron (sitting for Plumer M.R.) observing, "that he had always been of opinion, that a party withholding money from a person entitled to it, ought to pay to the person thus injured the interest which he might have made of it, if it had been paid before."⁵ But this does not appear to be the rule of the Court.⁶

In a case before Plumer M.R. the vendor was so charged, where the circumstances which justified this charge appear to have been the facts that the rents had been allowed to run in arrear, and that it was through the vendor's fault that the purchaser was not able safely to take possession.¹ But in a case where the vendor was similarly charged by Lord Romilly M.R., the judgment was reversed, on appeal, by Knight Bruce and Turner L.JJ., who decided that, in the absence of special circumstances, the vendor will not be charged with the rents which he might have received without wilful default, and that he will not be subjected to any inquiry unless there be evidence that he has in some way acted otherwise than a prudent owner would have done.²

since the date of the contract let the property (an oil mill, with plant and machinery,) to third parties, and that the plant was daily being deteriorated and worn out by the improper user thereof by the defendants' tenants, it was held that the plaintiff was entitled to discovery from the defendants of the names of the persons to whom, and the term for which, the property had been let.¹

§ 1435. The vendor's accountability for deterioration arises out of his constructive trusteeship² for the purchaser. Therefore, if the vendor of a farm subject to a yearly tenancy finds and knows, before the day for completion arrives, that it will be impossible to complete on that day, and that the tenancy will determine before actual completion, then, inasmuch as it is his duty, as a trustee for the purchaser, to keep the property in a proper state of cultivation, he ought to relet it on a yearly tenancy; unless the purchaser, being asked what he wishes to be done, is willing to run the risk of it being unlet, and will guarantee the vendor against any loss that may arise to him in case the purchase goes off.³

§ 1436. In a case that came before the Privy Council, the vendor of a coal mine, having, during delay of completion, worked the mine for his own benefit, was held bound to pay to the purchaser the value in situ naturali of the coal taken, i.e., its market value at the place where it was to be sold, less the costs of severing it and taking it from the mine to that place.⁴

§ 1438. Secondly, where it occurs during the period in which the vendor is in possession, but is the result of accident, without the fault of the vendor: so that where during this period the vendor was, in consequence of such an accident, compelled to expend money on or in respect of the property, as in shoring it up, or removing rubbish which had fallen on a neighbour's property, the vendor was held entitled to have this repaid by the purchaser: but the Court refused to make the purchaser pay the expenses of a reference to the Master in relation to the repairs, though that had been proper for the protection of the trustees of the estate.¹

the cause
of the mischief.

§ 1439. Thirdly, where the deterioration is due to the purchaser himself, the loss must fall on him, though not in possession. Thus, where a purchaser agreed with a tenant of the estate that he should give up possession if the purchaser had a conveyance by a certain time, and the tenant, misconstruing the agreement, gave up possession though the purchaser had not the conveyance; the purchaser was held to be the innocent cause of the mischief, and so responsible for the deterioration which resulted.²

Vendor
in personal occupation.

§ 1440. The cases which arise where the vendor is himself in personal occupation of the estate correspond with those where he is in receipt of the rents, except that, instead of having to pay over the rents received from others, he will have to pay to the purchaser an occupation rent to be set upon the estate, himself receiving interest in return.³

§ 1443. Thus where the property (a tavern) was occupied by the vendor, a licensed victualler, for the purposes of his business, and the purchasers, a railway company, having made default in payment of the purchase-money on the day named for completion, the vendor continued the business on his own behalf, but under great inconvenience, all his arrangements having necessarily to be made subject to determination on payment of the purchase-money, it was held that the purchasers were not entitled to any allowance by way of occupation rent.³

Instance.

§ 1444. Where the Court fixes an occupation rent to be paid by the vendor, he will, it seems, be allowed to deduct the income-tax on it as a "just allowance;" but the Court will not insert any express provision on the point in the judgment.⁴

II. Where the purchaser is in possession.

§ 1445. It follows from the principles already stated and discussed in this chapter that generally, in the absence of stipulation, a purchaser in possession of the estate which is the subject-matter of the contract must pay interest on the unpaid purchase-money from the time when his possession under the contract commenced until completion.⁵

§ 1446. The rule that the purchaser in possession shall pay interest on the unpaid part of the purchase-money will be applied even in cases where the delay arises from the neglect of the vendor, and the purchaser makes no actual profit out of the land.¹ “The act of taking possession,” said Grant M.R., “is an implied agreement to pay interest: for so absurd an agreement as that a purchaser is to receive the rents and profits to which he has no legal title, and the vendor is not to have interest, as he has no legal title to the money, can never be implied.”² and rents.

§ 1447. Accordingly where a purchase was to be completed by a given day, when the purchaser was to have possession, and it was provided that, if from any cause whatever the purchase-money should not be then paid, the purchaser should pay interest, and a delay of six months was occasioned, but innocently, by the vendor in not delivering proper abstracts, he was put to his election to pay interest or give up the rents, though notice had been given by the purchaser that the money was lying idle.³

§ 1448. In a case decided by Lord Romilly M.R.⁴ the contract provided that the purchasers should pay interest on the purchase-money at 4 per cent. from the time of their taking possession until the 1st of July, 1858 (the day for completion), at 5 per cent. from the last mentioned date until the 1st of January, 1859, and afterwards at 8 per cent. until payment, with a proviso that the purchasers should not be entitled to withhold payment of the purchase-money upon paying interest at the higher rates. The purchasers took possession before the end of 1857, but, without any misconduct on the vendor's part, completion did not take place until 1865. His Lordship held that the stipulation for the payment of interest at the rate of 8 per cent. was a separate and distinct contract which the purchasers were bound to perform, and not, as they contended, in the nature of a penalty to secure the completion of the purchase within a reasonable time. The case well illustrates the principle that stipulations of this kind will have effect given to them according to their natural meaning.¹

PART V.

§ 1449. Again where a purchaser under a decree accepted possession, and on a report of an objection returned possession, he was ordered to pay interest from the time at which he took possession, or at which a title was shown under which he might safely have done so, and even for the time during which he returned the possession.²

Possession re-

§ 1450. But where a purchaser had been let into possession at the intended time for completion, and afterwards, difficulties having without any fault on his part arisen to delay completion, paid the purchase-money into a separate account at a bank, and gave notice to the vendors that the money was appropriated to the purposes of the contract, and that he was ready to complete; Lord Romilly M.R. held that he was not chargeable with interest after the date of his notice, but must pay to the vendors any interest he had received from the bank in respect of the sum paid in.³

§ 1452. So strongly does the Court hold to this principle, that a purchaser in possession shall pay interest on the unpaid purchase-money, that it will look at any contract which appears to prevent the application of this rule by the light of this general principle of justice, and, it seems, refuse execution of it where it grossly violates this principle: for "a Court of Equity interposes only according to conscience."²

the execution of such assurances; and the purchaser was let into possession under a stipulation in the contract to that effect, but the assurances were not executed for forty years; the House of Lords held that the purchaser's exemption from interest, though permissible if the contract had been speedily executed, would not, under such circumstances and with such length of time, be enforced by a Court of Equity.¹

§ 1454. In a recent Irish case, the purchaser, who had been allowed to go into possession without paying the purchase-money, and had afterwards been forcibly dispossessed, sued for specific performance and damages. He was charged with interest for the period during which he was in possession, and, as from the time when the vendor retook possession, interest was not charged against the purchaser nor the rents against the vendor; and no damages were given.²

dispossessed.

§ 1455. Where a corporation, acting under some special Act of Parliament incorporating the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, takes possession of land by virtue of its statutory powers before the price has been ascertained, the vendor is generally entitled to interest on the purchase or compensation moneys from the date of the taking possession.³

§ 1456. But in a case where a Local Board compulsorily purchased lands which were subject to tenancies, and the price of the landlords' [vendors'] interest was ascertained by the verdict of a jury, the Court held that interest was payable by the purchasers from the date of the verdict, notwithstanding that they could not and did not obtain actual possession of the property for some time afterwards; but it was at the same time held that, if the vendors had received any rents since the verdict, the amount of those rents would be deducted from the interest.¹ This case has been doubted by the late M.R.,² and certainly seems to require reconsideration.

Occupation rent.

§ 1457. In one case, where the purchaser had been let into possession under the contract, and objected to the title, he was allowed to remain in possession on payment of an occupation rent: but the case seems to have been one of arrangement, not of strict right.³

In sales of reversionary estates.

§ 1458. In sales of reversionary estates, the purchaser cannot, of course, be let into actual possession or receipt of the profits of the estate purchased. It becomes, therefore, necessary to inquire from what period he is to be treated as if he were in possession, so as to render him liable to the payment of interest on his unpaid purchase-money: for the wearing away of the lives, or of the time after which the reversion will vest in possession, is justly considered equivalent to possession, and as creating in the purchaser a liability to pay interest.⁴

From what time interest runs.

§ 1459. The purchaser of such an estate pays interest from the time at which he became by law entitled to receive the rents,⁵ which is primâ facie the time fixed for completion of the contract;⁶ or, where the contract specifies no time for completion, the time at which a good title was first shown or the title was accepted.¹ This may of course be modified by contract: so where the contract stipulated that the rents should belong to the purchaser only from the time the contract was completed, the vendor was held not entitled to claim interest on the unpaid part of the purchase-money.²

PART V.
Ch. v.

§ 1460. In cases of sales of reversions under the Court, interest will, it seems, run from the time when the Chief Clerk's certificate of the result of the sale becomes binding.³ But where a time is specified at which the money ought to be paid into Court, that, and not the confirmation of the sale, will, it appears, be the time from which interest will run; as in the case of an estate in possession that would be the time at which a purchaser would be entitled to enter into the receipt of the rents. So where the 25th December, 1849, was appointed for the payment of the money into Court, but the abstract was delivered in September, 1851, and a good title was not made out till March, 1852, interest was directed to be paid from the 25th December, 1849.⁴

ought to accept, the vendor's right thus to proceed is clear. And the Court will pursue this course where the purchaser in possession admits a good title, though he may claim the right to object, it not having been approved by Counsel.¹

Title not made out.

§ 1463. On the other hand it is a general rule, that where it is through the laches of the vendor that the title remains incomplete, the Court will refuse an application for the payment of the purchase-money into Court.²

Purchaser
put to election.

§ 1464. But where the want of a good title's being shown is not from the default of the vendor, and the purchaser has not prejudiced the value of the property by his dealings with it when in possession, the Court will, it seems, put the purchaser to his election, either to pay in his purchase-money or to give up possession.

Instances.

§ 1465. Thus, in a case before Lord Eldon, where the purchaser was let into possession, both parties acting in the confidence that the title would soon be made out, and that confidence was "not (to use his Lordship's words) made good, and that was a surprise upon both," his Lordship expressed the opinion that the purchaser should be put to his election, either to give up possession or to pay the money into Court: but on a subsequent day his Lordship said only that the purchaser ought, at least, to pay interest on his purchase-money; and the point was ultimately settled by agreement between the parties.³ And notwithstanding some doubts cast upon the wisdom of this judgment in a subsequent case by Plumer V.C., who considered it to be "the imprudence of the vendor in letting the vendee into possession before the questions upon the title were disposed of,"⁴ the Court will generally put a purchaser in possession, where the title has providing that the vendors should nevertheless retain their lien for the unpaid purchase-money, and all rights and remedies incident to such lien, Kindersley V.C. held that the fact of the company having been let into possession did not prevent the vendors from applying to have either payment into Court of the unpaid balance of the purchase-money or delivery up of possession, and he ordered such payment or delivery to be made within a month, on the terms, however, that if possession were delivered up, the vendors should, within a fortnight after such delivery, pay into Court the instalment of the purchase-money which they had already received.¹

under other
title.

§ 1469. If the purchaser happens to be in possession under some other title than the contract, this is a circumstance against calling for the payment of the purchase-money into Court; as where the purchaser was in possession not under the contract for sale, but as tenant to the vendor at the time of the purchase;² and where the purchaser was a tenant in common with the vendor, and had with his consent been in receipt of the rents of the whole.³

§ 1471. Where the mere taking possession of the property does not furnish any ground for ordering the payment of the money into Court, the order will yet be made, and without giving the option of delivering up possession, where the purchaser in possession commits acts of ownership, particularly acts occasioning the deterioration of the property;² and this, even though the title may not have been made out,³ or the purchaser may be in possession according to the terms of his contract.⁴ The ground of this proceeding is that by such acts the purchaser is altering the property which constitutes the security of the vendor for his purchase-money, and diminishing the value of the vendor's lien on the estate.⁵

Acts of ownership.

§ 1472. Hence, acts of ownership which are clearly an improvement to the estate will not support such an application to the Court:⁶ and hence, also, acts which may not show that the occupier considers himself the owner, and so will not justify a decree of specific performance against him without further investigation of the title, may yet be a ground for an order to pay the money into Court, and the appointment of a receiver; so that in one case stubbing up an osier-bed, levelling the land and filling up a pond, were held to justify an order for payment and the appointment of a receiver, but a reference of title was at the same time made.⁷ In another case, Lord Eldon

§ 1473. Although, as we have seen, where delay occurs in the completion of a contract and the purchase-money bears interest, the purchaser paying such interest to the vendor is entitled to deduct the income-tax on the amount of the interest,² where the purchase-money is paid into Court, this deduction is not allowed: because payment into Court is not payment to the party as against whom the purchaser is entitled to deduct the tax. However the purchaser may, it seems, apply for the deduction when the money is paid out of Court.³

Procedure.

§ 1474. The order for payment into Court may be made on motion,⁴ and, if circumstances justify it, before the delivery of the defence.⁵ In the Court of Chancery the order might be made before answer,⁶ even though the defendant had filed no affidavit so as to bring the merits before the Court,⁷ and though the acts of ownership relied on were not stated in the bill;⁸ and the facts necessary to support such an application might be supplied by affidavit, whether stated in the bill and not admitted by the answer,⁹ or not stated in the bill.¹⁰

§ 1476. It has been decided that, when interest is payable by a purchaser in possession, the time at which it first becomes due within the meaning of the 42nd section of the Statute of Limitations (3 & 4 William IV. c. 27) is the time when the purchase-money becomes actually payable, though it (the interest) may have to be calculated from a much earlier date. In the case referred to the contract, made in March, 1811, stipulated that the purchase-money should be paid on the following 13th of May, but the transaction remained uncompleted for upwards of forty years under circumstances which kept alive the vendor's right to the purchase-money: it was held that all the arrears of interest from the 13th of May, 1811, were recoverable by the persons representing the vendor.²

CHAPTER VI.

OF THE DEPOSIT.

PART V.
Ch. vi.
Part payments.

§ 1477. It is common on sales of real estate for the purchaser to pay to the vendor at the time of the contract a portion of the purchase-money by way of part payment. This is very generally the practice in cases of sales by auction:¹ it is the exception in cases of sales by private contract. In many other cases payments are made to the vendor by way of instalment or part payment.

Deposit.

§ 1478. The deposit, unless paid on any special terms, is not merely part payment but is an earnest: so that on the one hand if the contract be performed, it is brought into account as part payment: on the other hand, if the purchaser make default, it may be retained by the vendor. The deposit is therefore a security for the performance of the purchaser's part of the contract. The authorities have not been uniform on this question, but the weight of authority is in favour of the statement above made.² Where without any default on the part of the purchaser the contract fails, the deposit and all other part payments ought to be repaid. And upon a summons under the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874,

¹ Note that where, on a sale by auction, there is a condition for the forfeiture of the deposit if the purchase be not completed within a certain time, the Court will generally relieve against the lapse of time. See per Lord Redesdale in Lennon v. Napper, 2 Sch. & Lef, at the Court has power to order the repayment of the deposit with interest where the ground for making the order does not affect the validity of the contract:¹ but by reason of the language of the 9th section of that statute it has no power to make such an order where such ground does affect the existence or validity of the contract.²

PART V.
Ch. vi.

§ 1479. The payment of the deposit or part payment to the vendor or his agent creates a lien for the amount paid on the vendor's interest in the land. "There can be no doubt, I apprehend," said Lord Cranworth, addressing the House of Lords, "that when a purchaser has paid his purchase-money, though he has got no conveyance, the vendor becomes a trustee for him of the legal estate, and he is, in Equity, considered as the owner of the estate. When, instead of paying the whole of his purchase-money, he pays a part of it, it would seem to follow, as a necessary corollary, that, to the extent to which he has paid his purchase-money, to that extent the vendor is a trustee for him; in other words, that he acquires a lien, exactly in the same way as if upon the payment of part of the purchase-money the vendor had executed a mortgage to him of the estate to that extent."³

Pur-chaser's
lien.

§ 1480. In *Rose v. Watson*⁴ W., having successfully resisted a vendor's suit for the specific performance of a contract to purchase a building estate on the ground of the vendor's representations not having been fulfilled, filed a bill to enforce his lien on the estate for deposit and instalments of purchase-money with interest. The House of Lords, affirming the decision of Kindersley V.C., held the plaintiff entitled to such lien

of lease,

§ 1481. The lien is not strictly confined to a case of simple purchase: it extends to the case of a lease, and entitles an intended lessee who has entered under the contract and expended money to a lien on the lessor's interest:¹ it extends, too, to a sub-purchaser: so that where A. sold to B. and received part payment from him, and B. sold to C. and received part payment from him, C. was held entitled to a lien on B.'s interest in A.'s estate.² and sub-

Extent of
lien.

§ 1482. This lien in the case of a purchaser extends to (i) all instalments of the purchase-money;³ (ii) interest thereon at 4 per cent. per annum;⁴ (iii) sums paid under the contract as interest on the unpaid purchase-money; (iv) interest thereon;⁵ and (v) the costs of an unsuccessful action by the vendor against the purchaser.⁶

Under Lands
Clauses
Act.

§ 1483. It may be observed in passing that a vendor under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, has no corresponding lien on the land sold for the costs of an arbitration payable to him by the company.⁷

Mode of enforcing lien.

§ 1484. The lien can, no doubt, be enforced in precisely the same way as a vendor's lien for unpaid

Forfeiture of

§ 1487. On the other hand, where the purchaser, after making a payment by way of deposit, unjustifiably repudiates the contract, or it in any other way goes off through his default, the vendor is, in the absence of stipulation on the point, entitled to retain the money, treating it as having been paid to him as a guarantee for the purchaser's performance of the contract.¹

§ 1490. Where the vendor was the plaintiff, and failed in his suit for specific performance, the Court might dismiss the bill, and order the plaintiff to return the deposit with interest at 4 per cent.;⁴ or it might declare the defendant entitled to a lien for these amounts and the costs of suit, and dismiss the bill subject to this declaration.⁵

The practice discretionary.

§ 1492. With regard to the power of the Court of Chancery to give the purchaser relief in respect of his deposit where he was the plaintiff, and specific performance was refused, considerable variation took place.² But in *Todd v. This decision was followed in many subsequent cases.⁴

OF SOME CONTRACTS IN PARTICULAR.

CHAPTER I.

OF CONTRACTS FOR THE SALE OF SHARES.

§ 1496. THE subject-matter of this chapter is contracts for the sale of shares between an existing and an intending shareholder, not contracts for the taking of shares from a company by an applicant. Contracts of the latter kind have been referred to in a previous part of this treatise.¹

§ 1497. The vendor or purchaser of shares may generally, as we have already seen,² maintain an action for the specific performance of the contract:³ he will be entitled to a direction that the defendant execute a proper deed of transfer and concur in all steps necessary to procure its registration, and also, in the case of the vendor being plaintiff, to a declaration of his right to indemnity in respect of calls on the shares accruing after the purchaser has become the owner in Equity:⁴ and where the circumstances of the case do not demand the whole of this relief, the plaintiff may receive so much as suits the necessities of the case: so, for example, the decree or judgment has in some cases been merely one for indemnity.

Relief at Common Law.

§ 1498. The Courts of Common Law having recognized the liability of the purchaser to indemnify the vendor, actions were, before the Judicature Acts came into operation, maintained on this liability in those Courts.¹

Contracts
where made.

§ 1499. Contracts of this description are, for the most part, made on the Stock Exchange, and it has been long established that, in such cases, the contract must be held to be made with reference to the customs of that body, or such of them as are not unreasonable or otherwise illegal;² the customs being partly written and partly unwritten, and liable to change from time to time, and to be proved afresh, and possibly differently, in each succeeding case.

But contracts for the sale of shares are sometimes made off the Stock Exchange, and then they are not regulated by any special customs, though they are naturally construed with reference to the constitution of the company, as established by its special Act, charter of incorporation, or other constituent instrument.

Contracts
on the Stock Exchange.

§ 1500. In order to comprehend the nature of contracts on the Stock Exchange, it must be observed that the members of the Stock Exchange consist of two classes, brokers and jobbers: that a broker is an agent of a vendor or purchaser of shares or stock: that a jobber is a dealer on his own account in the like commodities, who buys them for the purposes of resale at a profit: that on the Stock Exchange there are two classes of contract, those for cash and immediate execution, and those for the "account:" and that, as regards the dealings for the account, there are three successive days or times which, according to the customs of the Exchange, govern the execution of such contracts: viz., 1st, the name day, when a purchasing broker or jobber has to give the name of the original or of a substituted purchaser to the vendor's broker; 2ndly, the account or settling day, which is the day after the name day:—on this day the price has to be paid to the vendor's broker; and 3rdly, a period of ten days after the account day, allowed for the completion by registration of the transfers of the shares, where registration is required.

§ 1501. Bearing these facts in mind, the reader will be able to follow the practice on the Stock Exchange, which was fully stated in the evidence of Mr. De Zoete read by Lord Cairns in addressing the House of Lords in the case of Nickalls v. Merry,¹ "In the case supposed, where the jobber would stand as purchaser, he would on the day preceding such account day (which was usually called the 'name day') be bound to pass to the broker a ticket containing the name of a person, or of several persons, as the purchaser or purchasers of the said shares; or he might, if he pleased, pass his own name as such purchaser, in which latter case only would he have been bound himself to take to the shares. If the jobber had failed to pass to the broker such a name or names by the name day, the selling broker could have sold out the shares against him, and have compelled him to pay any loss thereon. Until the name day it was not seen who might stand ultimately either as purchasers or sellers, or, in other words, who might be the persons to transfer or to take transfers of shares, and until then a jobber might have had a great many transactions both of

PART VI.
Ch. i.

buying and selling with the same brokers or jobbers, or with various brokers or jobbers. On the name day in the case supposed, if the jobber having purchased had sold again, a ticket, containing the name of the person to whom the shares were to be transferred, would have been issued by and passed on from the ultimate purchasing broker to his seller, and so on through the hands of the other intermediate sellers and buyers in succession, who, whether acting as jobbers or as brokers, had dealt in the shares, until it reached the hands of the original selling broker. Every member passing a ticket was required to write on the back of it the name of the member to whom it was passed; such ticket would also have contained the amount of purchase-money agreed to be given for the shares by the ultimate purchasing broker, and also a note that he would pay the same. So many transactions of this kind took place during the account, that on the name day the ticket of necessity only remained in the possession of an intermediate jobber or broker for the time required to take the particulars of it. It sometimes happened that the same ticket passed through the same member's hands several times in fulfilment of bargains made with other members, and, as a matter of fact, he had neither the opportunity, time, nor the means for making inquiries respecting the name so passed. The original selling broker would not have been bound to deliver a transfer of the shares to the ultimate purchasing broker until the expiration of ten days after the account day, and during these ten days the said purchasing broker could not have bought in the shares against the seller. During this time it was open to the original selling broker to object to the name passed by his buyer, in which case such buyer would of course have passed on the objection to the person from whom he received the name as hereinbefore mentioned, and practically such buyer would have had no liability or interest in the question, as whatever grounds there might have been for objecting to the name would have had to be met by the person from whom it emanated, and who had originally issued the ticket, and the committee of the said Stock Exchange would, if appealed to by the selling broker, have decided as to the validity of any such objection, and would have required another name to be given in case they had considered it right to do so. But after the lapse of these ten days the selling broker was required to deliver the certificates and transfer of the shares to the said ultimate purchasing broker, or in default thereof, the latter could have bought in the shares against the seller. The usual course of business was for the selling broker to deliver the transfer, together with the corresponding ticket, to the said ultimate purchasing broker from whom he received the purchase-money. The said ultimate purchasing broker did not know to whom his ticket had been ultimately passed until the delivery of the transfer. According to the long-recognised and well-established rules and usages of the said Exchange, if the original selling broker did not deliver his transfer and certificates and obtain payment of the purchase-money within fifteen clear days from the name day, his immediate buyer was released from all loss caused by the default of the ultimate purchasing broker to pay for the shares, and the latter would alone remain responsible; in like manner if the member who issued the ticket containing the name of the intended transferee of the shares did not buy in, or attempt to buy in, the same shares within fifteen days from the account day, his immediate seller was released from all loss caused by the failure of any member through whose default the shares were not delivered to, and the purchase-money paid by, the ultimate purchasing broker; the jobber had fulfilled all the obligations required of him by the rules and usages of the said Stock Exchange in respect of his contract."

Positions of jobber
and purchaser
the same.

§ 1502. In this passage, and in several of the cases which have occurred, the jobber is spoken of as if his rights and liabilities were distinct from those of a broker. But the broker of a purchaser, and through him as principal the purchaser, appear to be in precisely the same position as a jobber.¹

Contract with first purchaser.

§ 1503. Such being the practice, the contract of sale to a jobber has been determined to be to the effect that, at the settling-day, he will either take the shares himself, in which case he must accept and register a transfer and indemnify the vendor, or he will give, as purchaser or purchasers, the name or names of one or more persons capable of contracting and who have authorised him to contract for them, and to whom no reasonable objection can be made: and that when the vendor has, by executing a transfer to the nominees, accepted them as purchasers, and the nominees have accepted the shares, through the delivery to their brokers, on a payment by their brokers, of the transfers and certificates of shares, then two things follow, viz., (i.) a new contract arises between the original vendor and the nominees of the original purchaser; and (ii.) as a consequence, the original purchaser is released and no action can be maintained against him in respect of the contract.² So that he is whole matter to a very elaborate examination, and held that it was no part of the contract of a purchaser of shares to give in either his own name or that of his real principal: that he contracts to accept a transfer into the name which he furnishes, and to indemnify the vendor against all calls after the transfer is executed and delivered to him: that the vendor has no right to object to execute a transfer not in any sense a guarantor of the performance of the new contracts by his sub-vendees.

PART VI.
Ch. i.

§ 1504. The peculiarity of this transaction does not consist in the extinction of the original contract by the new one: that occurs in many cases: but in the right reserved by the original contract to the purchaser to compel the vendor to accept a new contract in lieu of the old one. In short, the original contract with the purchaser is one for sale and purchase, with a right reserved to the purchaser, under certain circumstances, to call on the vendor to enter into a new and substitutionary contract, and an obligation on the part of the vendor to do so. It is an effective contract to contract.

Peculiarity of the contract.

§ 1505. Of the original liability of the first purchaser to be sued in specific performance and for indemnity there is no doubt. Let us now inquire a little more exactly what such original purchaser must have done to relieve himself from his original liability.

When is the original purchaser discharged?

1st. He must give as purchaser the name of a person capable of contracting. Accordingly it has been decided that the passing on the name of an infant is no satisfaction of the jobber's liability.¹

2ndly. He must give as purchaser the name of a person who has authorised the original purchaser to to any one named by the purchaser, and does not, by executing the transfer, release the purchaser from his liability to indemnify. His Lordship held, as a consequence, that Coles v. Bristowe and Grissell v. Bristowe (ubi supra) were rightly decided, but on wrong grounds, and that Maxted v. Paine [1st action] (L. R. 4 Ex. 81) was wrongly decided. See, as to this judgment, per James L.J. in Merry v. Nickalls, L. R. 7 Ch. at p. 750. Lord Blackburn's views seem to be practically overruled by the decision of the House of Lords in the last-named case (L. R. 7 H. L. 530).

PART VI.
Ch. i.

bind him to a contract of purchase: so that passing on the name of a person who gave no authority is no satisfaction of the first purchaser's liability.¹ As regards these two points, it has been urged that if no objection was taken to the name within ten days after the settling-day, that being the period allowed for the approval or rejection of the name of the ultimate purchaser, the original vendor lost his right to object: but the contrary has been held; the personal responsibility, and not the personal capacity or authority, being the only point left for inquiry and determination within the ten days.

3rdly. The original purchaser must give a name to which no reasonable objection can be taken. It seems that residence in Smyrna would be a reasonable objection.² This objection, if not taken within the ten days, would come too late.

Nominee need not be sub-vendee.

§ 1506. The nominee of the original purchaser, whether jobber or purchasing broker, is in most cases a sub-vendee. But this is not necessary. The exigency of the contract is satisfied if the name given as that of a purchaser be that of a person capable of contracting and who has contracted to take the shares. Thus, where the person named was a man of straw, who for a gratuity accepted the shares in a broken company, and the vendor's brokers did not object to the name given or require a better name, the original purchaser was held to have performed his contract, and so was no longer bound.³

PART VI.
Ch. i.

§ 1507. Where the nominee's name has been given, with his authority, by the jobber or purchasing broker, and such name has been accepted by the vendor by his executing the transfer to the nominee, and the nominee has through his broker paid for the shares and accepted the transfer and certificates, a new contract, as we have seen, arises between the vendor and the nominee.² This new contract may be enforced by an action for indemnity,³ or by an action for specific performance and indemnity.⁴

The new
contract.

§ 1508. In accordance with some of the authorities the new contract has, in the foregoing sections, been stated as arising when the nominee has paid for his shares and accepted the transfer and certificates, or, to put it in other terms, the original purchaser is only discharged when he produces a nominee who himself pays for the shares and accepts the transfer (and does not merely contract so to do).⁵ But there are not wanting authorities which would place the constitution of the new contract at a possibly earlier stage, viz., when by the ticket the new purchaser has been signified to the original vendor, and the vendor has signified his acceptance to the new purchaser.⁶ The point has never been precisely determined: and as the only notification that the original vendor accepts the new purchaser

§ 1509. The new contract is, as we have seen, between the original vendor and the ultimate purchaser or nominee. Between the original vendor and any of the intermediate parties there is no contract.¹

Castellan
v. Hobson.

§ 1510. In one case, however, it has been held that there is a right to indemnity in Equity on the ground of trust. The case alluded to is Castellan v. Hobson.² There A. through his broker sold to a jobber, B. B. sold to C. through his broker. C.'s broker gave the name of D., who was a man of straw and was held to be a trustee for C. A. executed a transfer to D. and received the money: D. did not execute the transfer, and before registration the company was wound up: C. was held liable to indemnify A., on the grounds that A. was a mere legal owner of the shares and entitled to indemnity from the real equitable owner, and that C. was such owner. It may be doubted how far the case can be considered as an authority since the decisions in *Coles v. Bristowe*³ and Maxted v. Paine (second action):⁴ for it would appear that A.'s original contract of sale was liable to be extinguished by a new contract which he agreed to enter into with a nominee, and that by executing the transfer to D. he accepted him as purchaser, and it would seem to follow that he could look to him and to no one else for indemnity. The non-registration of the transfer, too, seems immaterial according to the more recent cases.

Viscount Torrington
v. Lowe.

§ 1512. In some cases the ordinary form of contract is departed from, and a contract is made by the jobber or purchasing broker with registration guaranteed. This superadds an important obligation on the original purchaser, so that he has not completed his contract until he has either himself paid for the shares and registered the transfer, or has procured some nominee to do both these things. Therefore where the jobber procured a nominee to accept or pay for the shares, but the transfer was not registered, the jobber or original purchaser was still liable to a suit for specific performance and indemnity.¹

Contract with registration guaranteed.

§ 1513. Cases may, of course, often occur where, independently of the customs of the Stock Exchange, a third person may so adopt the purchaser's contract as to place himself in the shoes of the purchaser, and give to the vendor a direct right against himself. The practice of passing on shares before transfer executed gives great facilities for such a result to arise.

§ 1514. In one case W. directed his broker to buy shares in a discount company: the broker bought them from the plaintiff, and, on W.'s instructions, gave the name of G. (a director of the company) as purchaser. G. received the transfers made out in his name, retained them, and deposited them as security for the purchase-money, which was paid out of the company's funds and debited to G.'s firm. G. denied that he had assented to the shares being bought in his name: but Stuart V.C. held that G. had assented to

Fisher.*

§ 1515. A somewhat similar state of facts arose in an earlier suit. There A. sold to B., and B. sold to C. A. executed a transfer to C., which C. did not register. A. then sued B., and obtained a decree directing an inquiry as to A.'s title: the Master certified in effect that A., by executing the transfer to C., had precluded himself from making a title to B., and on this ground the bill was dismissed on further consideration.²

case.*

§ 1516. So again, in the case of a contract between A. and a company to take shares and make certain payments, the registration by the company of a transfer by A. to B., before A. had made the payments entitling him to be registered as a shareholder, was held by Lord Selborne (sitting as a Judge of first instance) to be a new contract between B. and the company which extinguished the earlier contract between A. and the company.³

§ 1517. The following circumstances require consideration in actions of this description.

The plaintiff in some cases has been only equitably entitled to the shares, which have been registered in the name of some third person. This has been held no objection to a decree for specific performance or for indemnity to the plaintiff.⁴

Making a call before the
contract.

§ 1518. Whether the fact that, before the contract was made, a call was made on the shares of which the purchaser was ignorant, was a defence to a suit for the performance of a contract to buy the shares, was a point much considered in the successive stages of the litigation in Hawkins v. Maltby,¹ but can hardly be said to have been there decided. In fact there the call was made on the same day as the contract, but whether before or after did not appear. In the absence of fraud or misrepresentation, it does not seem clear why the fact that a call, which the purchaser must have known could at any time be made, has been made should avoid the contract or prevent either party from enforcing it.

directors so choose: he is not entitled to an absolute and unconditional right to registration.¹ In a sale on the Stock Exchange it is no part of the vendor's duty, irrespective of express contract, to procure the registration of the transfer.²

iii. Where contract falls under neither i. nor ii.

§ 1522. (iii.) There are numerous contracts for the sale of shares which fall under neither of the two classes just adverted to: and with regard to these it is more difficult to say what is the effect of the power of the directors to refuse registration, or of their actual refusal.

Opposing views of Lord Romilly M.R. and Lord Chelmsford.

Opposite views have been expressed. On the one hand, Lord Romilly M.R. in one case expressed the view that every contract for the sale of shares is conditional on the company accepting the purchaser as a shareholder:³ on the other hand, Lord Chelmsford intimated an opinion that in no ordinary case will the discretionary power in the directors furnish a defence. "The directors," he said, "may decline to register, but the transaction is complete as between transferor and transferee."⁴

The opinion expressed by Lord Romilly M.R. in the case referred to⁵ can probably not now be sustained.

Poole v. Middleton.

§ 1523. In a subsequent case before the last-named Judge, the deed of settlement of the company provided that no shareholder should transfer his shares except in such a manner as the Board should approve: a shareholder contracted to sell his shares: the Board refused its consent to his making the transfer: and the vendor then refused to complete: the purchaser filed his bill, and obtained a decree on the ground that the deed of settlement did not prevent the sale of shares or give the directors an arbitrary will on such an occasion: in case the parties differed the conveyance was to be settled in Chambers.¹

PART VI.
Ch. i.

§ 1524. Whether, independently of the rules of the Stock Exchange or of other special contract, the duty of procuring the transfer to be registered rests on the vendor or purchaser, has not been the subject of any conclusive decision. It is a point of great moment for the determination of the question now under our consideration: for, if it rests on the purchaser, his non-performance of his obligation can never prejudice the vendor. There are in the cases arising upon Stock Exchange contracts² numerous dicta which imply that, generally, the duty is upon the purchaser, and it is apprehended that this will be the decision of the question when it shall arise.

The duty of procuring registration.

§ 1525. It is settled, and indeed could hardly be doubted, that when through the fault or default of the defendant the transfer had not been presented for registration, and then a winding up had intervened, and there was no evidence to show that, if the transfer had been duly presented by the defendant, he would not have been accepted as transferee, the objection based on the refusal to transfer must fail.³

Transfer not presented owing to default of defendant.

§ 1526. The winding up of the company has in many of these cases been urged as an objection to the relief sought: here we must distinguish between cases in which the presentation of a petition was before and those in which it was after the making of the contract.

presented, then the contract has been made by both parties in ignorance of that fact, and then the petition has resulted in a winding up, there has been common mistake or common ignorance: and in such a case it appears that the Court could not compel the specific performance of the contract.¹

ii. Petition presented after contract.

§ 1528. (ii.) But where the petition has been presented after the making of the contract the defence does not appear admissible: for the general rule, that the destruction or failure of the subject-matter of a contract after it is entered into is no defence, must prevail,² and if the contract cannot be performed modo et formâ, the Court can still give relief by way of indemnity.³

The defence in the latter case untenable.

§ 1529. The point has been urged in various forms. It has been said that the substitution of the one name for the other on the register of the company is part of the contract, and that by the winding up of the company this has become impossible: and further, as regards companies under the Companies Act, 1862, that the effect of the 131st and 153rd sections of that Act is to render transfers after the commencement of the winding up absolutely illegal and mere waste paper.⁴ But neither of these arguments seems valid. As to the first, it may be replied that, unless by special contract, the vendor is not bound to procure the registration, but that duty rests on the purchaser,⁵ and that in cases of contracts on the Stock Exchange the registration of the transfer is no part of the bargain: as to the second point, it is clear that the effect of the statute is not to make the transfer illegal or void, but to give a discretion to the liquidator, or the Court, to allow them to operate or not to operate as transfers.¹ In short, the question who is on the register is one between the company and the shareholder; the question who is to bear the calls and take the profits is one between the buyer and seller, with which the company is not concerned.²

CHAPTER II.

OF CONTRACTS RELATING TO CONTINGENT INTERESTS AND EXPECTANCIES.

PART VI.
Ch. ii.
Such contracts void at Common Law.

§ 1530. AT Common Law it has been laid down that the possibility of succession is not an object of disposition, and that if the heir were to dispose of the succession during the life of the ancestor, such disposition would be void, though the inheritance should afterwards have devolved on him.¹ However, in a case before the Queen's Bench, the Court supported as valid a contract to sell an estate if it should be devised to the vendor by a person then living.²

Secus in Equity.

§ 1531. In Courts of Equity contracts relating to expectancies have been long upheld,³ and that although they may in some sort seem to have defeated the intentions of testators, or been in fraud of parental authority.

Instances.

§ 1532. One of the earliest cases on the subject is Wiseman v. Roper,⁴ where a covenant to settle an estate, to which the covenantor had only an expectancy as heir, was after the descent of the lands specifically enforced against him.

¹ Per Lord Kenyon M.R. in Jones v. Roe, 3 T. R. 93. The Roman Law likewise prohibited such contracts. Pothier, Tr. des Oblig. Part I. chap. 1, sect. 4, § 2.

² Cook v. Field, 15 Q. B. 460.

³ Cf. Alexander v. Duke of Wellington, 2 B. & My. 35. The statement attributed to Lord Eldon in Carleton v. Leighton (3 Mer. at p. 671), that the expectancy of an heir could not be made the subject of contract seems an error of the reporter. Apparently the word contract is written for conveyance.

⁴ 1 Rep. in Ch. 154.

§ 1533. In Beckley v. Newland,¹ the plaintiff and the defendant had married two sisters, who were the presumptive heiresses of Mr. Turgis, a very rich man, who had made and revoked several wills, and ultimately made one leaving a great estate to the defendant, and only a small one to the plaintiff. Previously to the execution of the will, the plaintiff and the defendant had entered into a contract for the equal division between them of what should be left to each of them ; and this contract was upheld and specifically enforced by Lord Macclesfield, who said that the contract was “not disappointing the intent of the testator, for he did not design to put it out of either of the devisees’ power to dispose of the estate after it should come to him ; but, on the contrary, when the testator gave it to either of them, he by implication gave that person a power to dispose of the said estate when it should come to him.” The same principle was pursued by his Lordship in another like case,² and was followed by Lord Hardwicke, in upholding the validity of the conveyance of a contingency or possibility on the death of a sister unmarried.³

PART VI.
Ch. ii.
Beckley v.
Newland.

§ 1534. In Harwood v. Tooke,⁴ the plaintiff and the defendant, the celebrated John Horne Tooke, had made a parol contract to divide what should come to them from a testator : in satisfaction of this the plaintiff had given to the defendant Tooke a note for 4000*l.*, which he had indorsed over to the other defendant, Sir Francis Burdett, for valuable consideration. All that Lord Eldon ultimately decided in the case may have been that the plaintiff had no equity to follow the note into the hands of this purchaser for value ; and it appears from one of the reports that he expressed doubts whether the transaction between the plaintiff and the defendant Tooke was not a fraud on the testator, and whether the Court would at any rate assist in specifically performing such a contract. But the case has usually been treated as an authority for the validity of contracts relating to expectancies.¹

by sons to divide what they might receive from their father.

§ 1535. In another case the contract seemed, at first sight, in fraud of the parental authority, but was upheld on a like ground to that taken by Lord Maclesfield. A contract had been entered into by two sons to divide equally between them whatever they might receive from their father in his lifetime or after his decease, by will or otherwise. It was very strongly argued that this was a scheme on the part of the sons to protect themselves from the consequences of misconduct, and to bid defiance to parental authority. But Shadwell V.C. held that, as the testator had the power of giving an estate to his sons, so that they should have only the personal enjoyment without power of alienation, and did not choose so to give it, but gave it absolutely, he had allowed it to become liable to all their antecedent contracts, and therefore to the contract in question of which specific performance was accordingly granted.²

Covenant to charge annuity on expectancy.

§ 1536. Similar in principle is the case of Lyde v. Mynn,³ where a husband granted an annuity for his life, and by way of further security covenanted to charge it on all the property he should, in the event of his wife's decease, become entitled to by her will or otherwise; and it was held that no objection could be taken on the ground of its relating to a mere expectancy; and the Court accordingly specifically performed the covenant. And so, again, contracts respecting the costs of proceedings in lunacy, or the ultimate division of a lunatic's property, are not void.¹

PART VI.
Ch. ii.

§ 1537. In a case recently decided by Denman J., a husband and his wife had assigned to one of the plaintiffs (who was held by the Judge to be a trustee for the other plaintiffs) all the interest to which the wife or the husband might become entitled under the will of C., (who had at the time, to the wife's knowledge, made his will leaving his residuary estate to her for her separate use,) to secure 4000*l.* borrowed by the husband for the payment of his debts : and C. had died without altering his will. It was held that the wife had power to charge, and had by the contract effectually charged, her expectancy.²

Flower v. Buller.

§ 1538. The circumstances attending such contracts as those now under discussion are oftentimes of such a kind as to prevent the Court from enforcing them. Such were the circumstances in *Morse v. Faulkner*³ in the Exchequer, and in the more recent case of Ryan v. Daniel.⁴ In the latter case each of two young officers in the army signed and gave to the other a document, by which each charged his estate with 1000*l.* in favour of the other, in case the other should survive him, the consideration of each of these documents being the other of them : many years subsequently a correspondence passed between these officers with a view to a rescission of the transaction, but that intention was never carried into effect. The Court held that, looking at the circumstances of the transaction, the age and condition of the parties, and their subsequent correspondence, there was no equitable claim which the Court would enforce, but it retained the bill for twelve months, with liberty to bring an action to establish, if the plaintiff could, a legal debt.

§ 1539. It has been judicially suggested that contracts made by a person before the devolution of the estate or other realization of his expectancy are purely personal, and only capable of being enforced against the contractor personally during his lifetime. In Morse v. Faulkner,¹ in 1792, Eyre C.B. speaking of such a case, said, "The surrenderor not having any title whatever to the premises, at the time of the surrender, his agreement would not raise a lien upon the land; and although the present plaintiffs might have been relieved if they had filed their bill against him in his lifetime, that is after his title had accrued, yet it does not follow that therefore they can be relieved against his heirs. Neither the land itself or the conscience of the present defendants is bound by this act of William the surrenderor." It is however believed that this view has not received any subsequent confirmation.

CHAPTER III.

OF CONTRACTS FOR PARTNERSHIP.

§ 1540. As a general rule, the Court will not enforce specific performance of a contract to form and carry on a partnership.¹ And notwithstanding some early authorities more or less to the contrary,² it is clear that the Court would in no case compel performance of a contract to enter into a partnership not for a definite term:³ for it might be dissolved as soon as entered upon, and the interference of the Court would thus become simply nugatory.

PART VI.
Ch. iii.

Such contracts generally not enforced. Partnership at will.

§ 1541. Where however the contract defines the term of the partnership, and there has been part performance of the contract, the Court may specifically execute it by decreeing the parties to execute a proper deed, and, if necessary, by restraining any partner from carrying on business under the partnership style with other persons, and from publishing notices of dissolution.⁴

terms defined or ascertainable, has never, it is believed, been decided. The argument that such a judgment should be pronounced in order to give the plaintiffs legal rights, seems of much less weight now that the Courts of Common Law and Equity are united.

Where
contract illegal.

§ 1543. Contracts for partnership may in some cases be illegal, as amounting to sales of office, as contravening the laws regulating trade, or otherwise.¹ It is hardly necessary to observe that the Court will not in any way interfere for the benefit of parties claiming under such contracts, or in favour of contracts for partnership tainted with fraud, hardship, or improper conduct.²

Performance un-enforceable.

§ 1544. Again, where the contract had reference to the manufacture and sale of a patent medicine, Lord Eldon considered that the Court could not decree specific performance, because, if the recipe were a secret, the Court had no means of enforcing its own orders.³

Relief
on partnership articles.

§ 1545. There are of course a great many cases⁴ in which Courts of Equity give specific relief on partnership articles: but these are not cases of specific performance of executory contracts.

CHAPTER IV.

OF CONTRACTS FOR THE SALE OF SHIPS.

§ 1546. CONTRACTS for the sale of ships, or of shares in ships, have long been affected by legislation. The present position of legislation is shortly this. By the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104), it is enacted (s. 55) that a registered ship, or any share therein, when disposed of to persons qualified to be owners of British ships, shall be transferred by bill of sale, containing such description of the ship as is contained in the certificate of the surveyor, or such other description as may be sufficient to identify the ship to the satisfaction of the registrar, and which shall be in a form¹ given by the statute, or as near thereto as circumstances permit, and executed by the transferor before and attested by one or more witnesses: no individual is entitled to be registered as transferee till he has made a certain declaration (s. 56): and (s. 57) every bill of sale with the required declaration is to be produced to the registrar, who is to enter the name of the transferee as owner in the register book.²

§ 1547. By the Merchant Shipping Act Amendment Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 63), s. 3, it is declared to be the intention of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, that, without prejudice to the provisions

Persons qualified owners of British ships.

Result of the legislation.

§ 1548. The definition of persons qualified to be owners of British ships is to be found in the 18th section of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854.

§ 1549. The result of this legislation appears to be clear: that any person qualified to be the owner of a British ship may sue on any contract for the sale of a ship or share in a ship, and that on obtaining judgment he will be entitled to be registered: but that, pending entry of his name as owner on the register, no notice of his equity can appear on the register, or be noticed by the registrar: that the registered owner or mortgagee can make a good transfer and give good receipts to purchasers for value without notice of the equity under the contract: and lastly, as regards unqualified persons, that they cannot maintain an action for the sale of a ship or share in a ship to them.

History
of the legislation.
The Act 26
Geo. III.
c. 60.

§ 1550. It may be convenient very briefly to advert to the history of the legislation on this topic.² The Act 26 Geo. III. c. 60 required (section 17) the bill of sale on every transfer to recite the certificate of registry, and declared that otherwise such bill of sale should be utterly null and void. The Act being silent as to contracts, doubts arose which were ended by the Act 34 Geo. III. c. 68, which (sect. 14) made void both at Law and in Equity all contracts unless made in the manner prescribed by the former Act. Under these Acts a contract for the sale of a ship not reciting the certificate, but having a copy of the certificate annexed, was void.¹

PART VI.
Ch. iv.

§ 1551. These Acts were repealed: and the enactment which then came into force was 4 Geo. IV. c. 41, which provided (section 29) that when and so often as the property in any ship, or any part thereof, belonging to any of His Majesty's subjects, should, after registry thereof, be sold to any other or others of His Majesty's subjects, the same should be transferred by bill of sale or other instrument in writing, containing a recital of the certificate of registry of such ship or vessel, or the principal contents thereof, otherwise such transfer should not be valid or effectual for any purpose whatever, either in Law or in Equity: to which was added a proviso limiting the effect of an error in such recital.

ment as § 1552. This clause, which departed from the language of the older statutes, was re-enacted by the 6 Geo. IV. c. 110, s. 31, the 3 & 4 W. IV. c. 55, s. 31, and the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 89, s. 34: and the 37th section of the last-mentioned Act further provided that no bill of sale or other instrument in writing should be valid or effectual to pass the property in any ship, or in any share thereof, or for any other purpose, until the same was entered on the register.

Re-

by subsequent

§ 1553. The change of language gave rise to a question: but it was determined, under the last cited Act, that executory contracts to transfer not complying with the terms of the Act were avoided by them.²

The Merchant Shipping
Act, 1854.

§ 1554. Then came the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104), which omitted all express reference to executory contracts, and omitted also any such words as are contained in the 37th section of the previous statute (8 & 9 Vict. c. 39); and thereupon the question arose whether executory interests might be enforced under contracts not complying with the formalities of the Act: and this question was determined, as to an equitable mortgage, in the negative.¹ It has, however, been recently decided that an executory contract to transfer a ship to a purchaser need not be registered, and may be enforced by the registered owner notwithstanding the non-registration.²

The Amendment Act of 1862.

§ 1555. Lastly has come the amending statute of 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 63), which permits the enforcement, under certain conditions, of equities, clearly including the equity which results from a contract for sale not satisfying the statutory requisites for the legal transfer.

Contracts
as to money accruing from sale of ship.

§ 1556. Independently of the Statute of 1862, it has been determined that the Merchant Shipping Acts do not apply to a contract relative to the produce of the sale of a ship. A. was the registered owner of certain shares for his father's representatives: he was captain of the ship, and entered into a contract with his father's administrators that he should navigate the ship for twelve months and account for the profits, and at the end of the twelve months sell the shares and account for their proceeds. He sold the ship: and on bill filed to enforce the contract, the objection from the Merchant Shipping Acts was overruled.³ This

OF CONTRACTS BY MARRIED WOMEN.

PART VI.
Ch. v.

Common law incapacity.

Present state of the law.

§ 1558. By the common law of England a married woman has no capacity to bind herself by contract. This was first modified by certain doctrines of Equity and now by statute law.

§ 1559. A married woman may now create a contractual obligation in the following ways:—

(1.) By contract relating to her realty under the Act for the abolition of Fines and Recoveries.

(2.) By means of the exercise of a power.

(3.) By compromise of an actual suit pending between her husband and herself.

(4.) By contract under the Married Women's Property Act, 1882.

But with these exceptions she is still—with one other doubtful exception—incapable of binding herself by contract.

Such is, it is believed, the present position of the law.

As to real estate.

§ 1560. (i.) As regards the real estate of a married woman not settled to her separate use or subject to her power she may, under the Act for the abolition of Fines and Recoveries, not only dispose of the land but contract respecting it, if not so as to render herself liable to damages, yet so as to bind her estate of inheritance.¹

This is the only power of control or alienation which a married woman possesses over such real estate.¹

PART VI.
Ch. v.

We are not here concerned with questions arising from the fraud or election of a married woman: but it is certain that the compromise of a matrimonial suit between herself and her husband will not enable her to bind her realty not settled to her separate use.²

§ 1561. (ii.) As regards the exercise of a power, if a married woman have a power to be exercised subject to certain formalities required for her protection, and she affect to contract by an exercise of the power, but without these formalities, there will be no judgment against her; for, except under these formalities, she has no power to contract, and the paper signed by her is void.³ But where the formalities omitted are immaterial for the protection of the married woman, her estate may be bound by the exercise of the power, and the contract constituted by such exercise may be specifically enforced.⁴

Contract under power informally exercised.

§ 1562. (iii.) As regards agreements to compromise matrimonial suits between husband and wife, Lord Hatherley, when a Vice Chancellor, in more than one case intimated his opinion that the power of a wife to contract with her husband is not confined to her separate property, but that “under any circumstances, when the wife is put in such a position that she can be regarded for the purposes of the contract as a feme sole,” she may so contract.⁵ The learned Judge considered that the case of Bateman v. Countess of Ross,⁶ supports this proposition. The last-mentioned case is not very fully reported. In the case of Besant v. Wood,¹ Jessel M.R. adopted the same view, holding that a married woman must take as incident to her undoubted right to sue (whether by next friend or even alone) for divorce or restitution of conjugal rights, the right to contract, i.e., to compromise her suit: that as a necessary corollary to the right to sue, she must have the right to contract not to sue; and that, therefore, she can enter into a valid and enforceable contract to live separate and apart from her husband. Notwithstanding the case of Cahill v. Cahill,² in the House of Lords, which seemed to make it doubtful whether the latter case is right, and whether the competency of the wife to contract with her husband must not be confined to the cases of actual suits between them, the Court of Appeal have recently accepted the doctrine of Besant v. Wood, and applied it to a case in which a husband and wife were in litigation only by means of cross-summonses for assault: Lord Justice Lindley observing, that the wife's capacity appeared to extend to all proceedings which husband and wife are by law capable of taking against each other.³

Married Women's Property
Act, 1882.

§ 1563. (iv.) By the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, a new contractual power was conferred on married women. The following are the relevant provisions of the statute:—

Sect. 1,
sub-s. 2.

“A married woman shall be capable of entering into and rendering herself liable in respect of and to the extent of her separate property on any contract, and of suing and being sued either in contracts or in torts, or otherwise in all respects as if she were a feme sole, and her husband need not be joined with her as plaintiff or defendant, or be made a party to any action or other legal proceeding brought by or taken against her; and any damages or costs recovered by her in any such action or proceeding shall be her separate property; and any damages or costs recovered against her in any such action or proceeding shall be payable out of her separate property, and not otherwise.

PART VI.
Ch. v.

“Every contract entered into by a married woman shall be deemed to be a contract entered into by her with respect to and to bind her separate property, unless the contrary be shown.

Sect. 1,
sub-s. 3.

“Every contract entered into by a married woman with respect to and to bind her separate property shall bind not only the separate property which she is possessed of or entitled to at the date of the contract, but also all separate property which she may thereafter acquire.”

Sect. 1,
sub-s. 4.

Section 19 provides that “Nothing in this Act contained shall interfere with or affect any settlement or agreement for a settlement made or to be made, whether before or after marriage, respecting the property of any married woman, or shall interfere with or render inoperative any restriction against anticipation at present attached or to be hereafter attached to the enjoyment of any property or income by a woman under any settlement, agreement for a settlement, will, or other instrument; but no restriction against anticipation contained in any settlement or agreement for a settlement of a woman’s own property to be made or entered into by herself shall have any validity against debts contracted by her before marriage, and no settlement or agreement for a settlement shall have any greater force or validity against creditors of such woman than a like settlement or agreement for a settlement made or entered into by a man would have against his creditors."

Sect. 23.

Section 23 of the Act places the legal personal representative of a wife in her place in respect of her separate estate as to rights and liabilities.

§ 1564. On these clauses the following observations may be presented to the reader's consideration, as possibly relevant to any action for specific performance on a married woman's contract:—

The statute a code.

(1.) It is presumed that the statute may be taken as a code of law relative to the contracts of married women, and that as such it supersedes the previously existing equitable doctrines with regard to such contracts—doctrines which, with considerable modifications and alterations, are adopted by the statute. This seems to render a discussion of the old equitable doctrines no longer of practical importance in this work.

Applies to all married women.

(2.) The clauses relative to contract appear to apply to all married women, without reference to the time of their marriage or of the acquisition of the property with which they are dealing.

Implied
contracts.

(3.) The words "or otherwise" in the statute will probably be found largely to extend the liability of married women, and may at least render them liable on implied contracts on which they could not before the statute have been sued.¹

Contract is only in respect of separate property.

(4.) The married woman is only capable of entering into any contract in respect of and to the extent of her separate property, free from restraint on anticipation: she can render herself liable only in respect of and to the extent of this separate property. These words introduce new conceptions into the law of contract, and have created great peculiarities in the relief granted against married women. From them flow important consequences:—

α. Unless the married woman have separate property at the date of the contract, she cannot contract at all: its existence is a condition of the power.¹ The separate property, to justify the existence of a contract by the married woman, must, it would appear from section 19, be property free from the restraint on anticipation.

PART VI.
Ch. v.
Consequences.

β. It follows from the restrictive words of the statute that execution under a judgment against a married woman is limited to the separate property of the married woman not subject to any restriction against anticipation, unless, by reason of sect. 19 of the Act, the property shall be liable to execution, notwithstanding such restriction.²

γ. It further follows from the words of the clause under consideration that no attachment for debt can be issued against the person of a married woman under the Debtors Act.³

§ 1565. It is obvious that these peculiarities of the contracts of a married woman under the Act may lead to considerable difficulties in the enforcement of a judgment for specific performance against a married woman. This question does not appear yet to have received any elucidation from judicial decision. But it seems probable that the matter may stand thus: if the judgment or order be for payment of a debt, then the woman cannot be imprisoned by reason of the Debtors Act, 1869.⁴ On the contrary, if the judgment or order direct her to do something other than the payment of money, disobedience would be a contempt not within the Debtors Act, 1869, and the old law would apply under which an attachment might issue

CHAPTER VI.

OF CONTRACTS FOR SEPARATION DEEDS.

§ 1568. It seems clear that a contract providing for the separation of husband and wife at a future time is against public policy, and will not be enforced by the Court; and further that any instrument which provides for a present separation, but also prospectively looks forward to the parties living together again, and then to a future separation, is, so far as it provides for that future separation, equally unenforceable.¹

PART VI.
Ch. vi.

Contracts for future separation not enforced.

§ 1569. The jurisdiction of Courts of Equity to enforce the specific performance of contracts for present separation, by the execution of proper deeds of separation, was established in the House of Lords, after a learned argument against it, in the case of Wilson v. Wilson,² where Lord Cottenham showed that the law does not now consider a contract for present separation so contrary to public policy as to make void all arrangements of property arising out of it.

Extent of jurisdiction.

§ 1570. In order to enable the Court thus to interfere, there must of course be a valid contract. It is essential to this that the contract be between persons capable of contracting, and therefore, on the ground

There

contract.

of a husband's general inability to contract with his wife without the intervention of some third person, it has been supposed that a simple contract between them to live separate will not be enforced by the Court.¹ And a husband and wife in actual litigation on matrimonial matters may, it seems, contract with one another for a separation.² But it is doubtful whether they can so contract under any other circumstances.³

Good consideration.

§ 1571. There must also be a good consideration: and as in contracts for separation this is sometimes peculiar, it will be well very briefly to allude to a few of the cases.

Instances.

§ 1572. It has been decided that the staying a suit in the Ecclesiastical Court for nullity of marriage, on the ground of impotency of the husband, is a sufficient consideration as against him:⁴ and where the husband had so behaved as that the wife might have obtained a divorce a mensâ et thoro, and she agreed, instead of prosecuting her right, to accept maintenance from the husband, this was held a good consideration.⁵ A good consideration is also afforded by an engagement by the trustees to indemnify the husband against the wife's debts;⁶ or even by a covenant to that effect conditional on an annuity, which was agreed to be paid, being secured;⁷ or, as it seems, by a covenant of a third party to pay the husband's debts.⁸ So, in a contract which provided for the execution of a separation deed to contain all proper and usual clauses, and also a stipulation that the costs of the deed should be paid by the husband and wife's father in moieties, the Court found consideration not only, it appears, in the contract as to the costs, but also in the covenant by the father to indemnify the husband, which seems to have been held to be a usual clause.¹

PART VI.
Ch. vi.

§ 1573. In many contracts for separation there have been contained provisions as to the care of the children which have been held to be at variance with the law, and so have formed a bar to the performance of the contract. For the law of England gives to the father the custody and control of his children, and casts on him the duty of caring for them and seeing to their education; and this duty he can neither renounce nor delegate.²

Care of children.

§ 1574. On this ground the following contracts have been held incapable of performance:—a contract by the father to allow an infant son to remain under the care of his mother:³ a contract that the mother should have the children above seven years of age:⁴ and a contract to allow an infant daughter to remain under the control of and to be educated and supported by her mother.⁵ But a stipulation in a deed that her children should remain at such schools in England as the husband, or such schools elsewhere as the husband with the consent of the wife, should from time to time direct, and that the holidays of the children should be passed by them at such places and in such manner as the trustees should from time to time direct, having regard as far as practicable to the wishes of each of them, the husband and wife, was held by Lord Hatherley, reversing the decision of Lord Romilly M.R., to be reasonable.⁶

Act to amend the law as to custody of infants.

§ 1575. An alteration in this branch of the law has recently been effected by statute (36 Vict. c. 12). The 2nd section of this Act enacts that no agreement contained in any separation deed made between the father and mother of an infant or infants shall be held to be invalid by reason only of its providing that the father of such infant or infants shall give up the custody or control thereof to the mother; provided always that no Court shall enforce any such agreement if the Court shall be of opinion that it will not be for the benefit of the infant or infants to give effect thereto.

Effect of this Act.

§ 1576. It will be observed that this enactment applies in terms only to agreements contained in deeds, and not to contracts to execute separation deeds. But as the invalidity of the deed itself is removed, the whole objection to the specific performance of the contract falls also.¹

Specific
relief.

§ 1577. The questions which arise on specific relief with respect to the stipulations contained in deeds of separation do not, of course, fall within the purview of this treatise, which relates to executory contracts only.

OF CONTRACTS TO COMPROMISE.

§ 1578. THE Court will specifically enforce private compromises of rights in the way in which it will any other contracts; and, inasmuch as the compromise of a bonâ fide claim to which a person believes himself to be liable, and of the nature of which he is aware, is a good consideration for a contract, the Court, in enforcing the compromise, will not inquire into the validity of the claim on which it is founded.¹

PART VI.
Ch. vii.

Private
compromises.

§ 1579. A mistake, therefore, of one of the parties to a compromise as to his rights would probably be unavailing as a defence to an action; but the compromise may be made under such mistakes as regards other matters of fact as may induce the Court to refuse performance.²

Mistake,
how affecting compromises.

§ 1580. Where the compromise sought to be enforced related to proceedings in another Court, it was manifest that the Court of Chancery could only entertain jurisdiction on a bill filed.³ But where the primary litigation was also in the Court of Chancery, the question arose whether the compromise could be enforced in the original suit, by an interlocutory proceeding in it, or only by a fresh suit, based on the compromise.

Jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery.

§ 1581. It seems that where the immediate interference of the Court was necessary to give effect to the contract, as where a party to the contract was, but for it, liable to an immediate attachment, there the Court would to that extent interfere to execute the contract in the original suit.

Where all parties before the Court and the matter simple.

§ 1582. Further, there is authority to show that, where all the parties to the compromise were parties to the original suit, and the equity arising out of the compromise was of the same nature as the original equity, as where an account was to be taken alike under the original suit and under the compromise,—where the whole matter was before the Court, and the acts to be done were simple,—there the Court might enforce the compromise by interlocutory proceeding in the original suit.¹

In other cases a fresh suit requisite.

§ 1583. But, before the Judicature Acts, if not in all other cases, at least in all cases where the contract to compromise went beyond the ordinary range of the Court in the existing suit, or the equity sought to be enforced was different from that on the record, or the contract was disputed, or the right to have it enforced in the suit was disputed, or the parties were not identical, there the proper course of proceeding was by bill for the specific performance of the contract to compromise.²

Swinfen v Swinfen.

§ 1584. In the litigation which arose out of the will of Mr. Samuel Swinfen, the mode of enforcing a compromise entered into by Counsel was much discussed, as well as the authority of Counsel to bind his client to a compromise. The original proceeding was a suit in Chancery by the heir of one of the next of kin, for the purpose of securing the testator's real and personal estates whilst proceedings were being taken to set aside the will on the ground of the want of testamentary capacity. The will gave the property to Mrs. Swinfen, the widow of the testator's son. Lord Romilly M.R. directed an issue devisavit vel non, in which Mrs. Swinfen was plaintiff and the heir was defendant. During the trial at Stafford the leading Counsel for the plaintiff and for the defendant signed a memorandum of compromise, including a stipulation for a conveyance of the land by the plaintiff at Law to the defendant, and the payment by the defendant to the plaintiff of an annuity. The memorandum of compromise was embodied in an order at Nisi Prius, and afterwards made a rule of the Court of Common Pleas. Mrs. Swinfen declined to perform the contract, as made without her authority and against her wishes. Thereupon a rule nisi for an attachment against her was obtained, but discharged on the ground of want of evidence of demand of performance and refusal.¹ A second application for an attachment was refused because one of the Judges of the Court of Common Pleas doubted the authority of Counsel to bind the plaintiff at Law.² Thereupon the defendant at Law and original plaintiff in Equity filed a supplemental bill for the specific performance of the contract, or in the alternative that another issue devisavit vel non might be directed. This bill was dismissed by Lord Romilly M.R. without costs, on the ground of want of authority of Counsel:³ and this decision was affirmed by Knight Bruce and Turner L.JJ.,⁴ on the ground that, even if the plaintiff at Law was bound at Law, the contract was not one of which, under the circumstances, specific performance should be decreed. quently brought an action against her leading Counsel (then Lord Chelmsford) for damages, but failed.¹

§ 1585. The Judicature Act, 1873, has introduced a great improvement in this practice. By section 24, sub-section 7, the Court has in every cause power to grant all such remedies whatsoever as any of the parties may appear to be entitled to in respect of any claim properly brought forward by them in such cause; so that as far as possible all matters so in controversy between the parties may be completely and finally determined. Accordingly it has been decided that the Court has jurisdiction to stay all further proceedings in the action compromised, in cases in which an independent suit would probably have previously been necessary.²

CHAPTER VIII.

OF AWARDS.

§ 1586. THE Court of Chancery, in many cases, decreed the specific performance of awards, though not made rules or orders of the Court, for the performance of some specific thing, as to convey an estate, assign securities, or the like;¹ but not, it would seem, awards simply to pay money.² The Court thus decreed their performance “because,” to use Lord Eldon’s language, “the award supposes an agreement between the parties, and contains no more than the terms of that agreement ascertained by a third person.”³

PART VI.
Ch. viii.

Extent of the jurisdiction.

§ 1587. Lord Hardwicke⁴ seems to have laid it down that a bill to carry an award into execution, where there was no acquiescence in it by the parties to the submission, or contract by them afterwards to have it executed, would not lie. But, as we have seen, subsequent cases established that the jurisdiction was not subject to these restrictions.

Lord Hardwicke’s doctrine

§ 1588. The fact that the submission had been made a rule of a Common Law Court created no impediment to its specific performance by the Court of Chancery,⁵ though it would have been otherwise in a suit to set it aside.⁶

Ch. viii.Where award not binding at Law.

§ 1589. There is an old case in which the Court of Chancery specifically enforced an award not binding by form of law.¹ But, in Blundell v. Brettargh,² Lord Eldon said he had met with no authority for the specific performance of an award by arbitrators appointed for the valuation of interests, where their acts, for the purpose of carrying into effect the contract for an award, were not valid at Law, as to the time, manner, or other circumstances, unless in the cases of acquiescence or part performance: and accordingly in the case before him he refused specific performance of a contract to sell at a valuation, which, on the construction of the contract, the Court held was to be made during the lives of the parties, one of them having died before the award was made.

Abandonment of a term of the submission.

§ 1590. It is however plain that by mutual abandonment of some provision of the submission, as, e.g., that limiting the time for the award, the defendant may be precluded from raising in a Court of Equity an objection which might otherwise prevail.³

Award
unreason-
able.

§ 1591. The objection arising from unreasonableness, not of the submission but of the award itself, the Court is not willing to entertain; for the arbitrators being judges of the parties' own choosing, it has been held that the award cannot be objected to by either of the parties, on the ground of its being unreasonable.⁴ This principle was stated and acted on by Lord Eldon in Wood v. Griffith,⁵ where his Lordship enforced the specific performance of an award which ordered the sale of an estate under circumstances which greatly depreciated its value.

more than unreasonable,—where the award is in excess of the authority given to the arbitrator, the Court, of course, refuses to enforce it. In a case that came before Knight Bruce and Turner L.JJ., the award was objected to as unreasonable, but it was contended on the other side that the Court could not entertain the objection. Turner L.J., after expressing his dissent from the observations of Lord Eldon in Wood v. Griffith,¹ said, “If it be a fair subject of discussion and consideration, whether one course or another course be the right one to be taken by parties who have submitted their differences to arbitration, and have said that they will abide by the decision of the arbitrator, I might agree that the judgment of the arbitrator upon that question must decide the point. But here the judgment of the arbitrator goes to the length of destroying the right of one of the parties to the agreement, though the parties never authorized Mr. Carmael to decide that any one of them had no right, and should acquire no interest in the subject in dispute, but only agreed that he should determine the mode in which their rights and interests should be regulated. It seems to me, therefore, that, if it was necessary to decide this question upon the point of unreasonableness, that point alone would be sufficient to decide it.”² excess of authority.

§ 1593. The interference of the Court in these cases being in exercise not of any jurisdiction peculiar to awards, but of its ordinary jurisdiction as applied to the specific performance of contracts, it follows that many, if not all, the principles applicable to ordinary actions of that nature must apply.³

Grounds
of defence.

§ 1594. Where therefore the contract contained in the submission is such in its character as, whether from its unreasonableness, unfairness, or imprudence, the Court would not specifically enforce, this will prevent its interference in respect of the award founded on it.¹

Award excessive or defective.

§ 1595. Nor can the Court interfere where the award is excessive or defective: not if it be excessive, for so far the arbitrator has gone beyond his authority, and there is no binding contract between the parties: not if it be defective, because the parties had contracted to be bound by his decision on the whole, and not on part of the matters submitted to him.²

Defect
owing to defendant.

§ 1596. In a case where the submission was of all matters in difference, and the defendant omitted to submit questions which he alleged ought to have been decided, he was naturally held to be precluded from so doing by the course which he himself had pursued.³

Award
uncertain.

§ 1597. Where the award is uncertain on its face, and that uncertainty is not removed by the arbitrator's evidence, the Court refuses specific performance of the contract, though the plaintiff may waive all claims beyond the award as construed against him.⁴

Blackett
v. Bates.

§ 1598. Where the plaintiff has first sought to set the award aside, it is doubtful whether he can afterwards turn round and maintain an action for the specific performance of it, especially where there has been a considerable lapse of time.⁵

Misconduct of valuer.

§ 1599. The cases which have arisen of misconduct or impropriety of conduct on the part of persons appointed to value a rent, or the amount of purchase-money, throw light on the way in which the Court would regard like misconduct on the part of persons more accurately described as arbitrators.⁶

CHAPTER IX.

OF CONTRACTS TO REFER TO ARBITRATION.

§ 1600. WITH regard to contracts to refer to arbitration, it is clear that the Court will not entertain actions for their specific performance,—a principle in the first place, it seems, acted upon by Lord Thurlow in a case of Price v. Williams,¹ and which has been since well established.² In one case Knight Bruce and Turner L.JJ., upon this amongst other grounds, refused to compel the specific execution of a bond to refer to arbitration.³

§ 1601. In like manner we have seen that, where there is a contract to buy at a price to be fixed by persons to be named, the Court can neither compel a defendant to name a valuer, nor compel a valuer to value, nor compel the defendant to sell at any other value.⁴

Ch. ix.

Inequitable refusal of plaintiff to refer.

§ 1603. Though the Court will thus refuse specifically to enforce references to arbitration, an inequitable refusal of a plaintiff to make such a reference may disentitle him to the aid of the Court, on the principle that he who seeks equity must do equity. Thus, where a deed was executed which created a lien for the amount of a solicitor's bills and advances, the amount of which was to be settled by arbitration, and the arbitrator died before the award was made; in a suit seeking the reconveyance of the property, Alderson B. held that the contract between the parties was composed of two distinct parts,—the first admitting that some balance was due to the solicitor, and the second, a contract for a specific mode of ascertaining that balance; that the latter part alone had failed; that the former part remained entire, and that the Court would not decree a reconveyance without the plaintiff's consenting to do equity by having the accounts taken by the Master.¹

Arbitration Act, 1889.

§ 1604. By the 4th section of the Arbitration Act, 1889, every Court has power under certain circumstances to stay proceedings in actions in respect of any matters agreed to be referred to arbitration. A similar power had been given by the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, s. 11. Under this enactment orders have been made which have indirectly the effect of compelling the plaintiff specifically to perform the contract to refer to arbitration.²

OF CONTRACTS NOT TO APPLY TO PARLIAMENT.

§ 1605. THE Court has not infrequently been asked to enforce the specific performance of a contract not to apply to Parliament, by means of an injunction restraining such application.

Mode of
ment.

§ 1606. It is perfectly clear that a Court of Equity has power, upon a proper case being made out, to enjoin a person from petitioning Parliament; for the Court merely acts in personam, and does not therefore in any way interfere with the proceedings of Parliament:¹ but what is a proper case for this interference of the Court is a question of considerable difficulty. It has even been said that it is difficult to conceive or define what are the cases in which it would be proper for the Court to exercise its undoubted power of restraining any person from making an improper application to Parliament.²

§ 1607. The mere fact that the intended application to Parliament will abrogate existing rights and create new ones can give no right to such an injunction; for that would be to restrain Parliamentary interference in all such cases.³ Nor will the Court interfere, even where for the protection of private interests a contract not to apply to Parliament has been entered into, provided the party making the application to the legislature may urge it upon grounds of public policy, of which Parliament can judge, but a Court of Equity cannot.¹ This seems to apply to all cases in which the application is in soliciting a Bill; for in all such cases grounds of a public nature may be urged.

Accordingly, in a case where the defendant company contracted with the plaintiff company not to make any line connecting their respective railways except one which had been already applied for by the defendants, and in consideration of this the plaintiffs agreed to support, instead of opposing (as they had previously done), the application of the defendants for the last-mentioned line, and the plaintiffs performed their part of the contract, and the defendants' application was successful; the Court nevertheless refused to restrain the defendants from applying to Parliament in contravention of their contract, considering that such an application, if successful, would be so on public grounds, of which the Court could not judge, and that, if it were rejected, the breach of the contract, if a legal one, might be compensated for in damages.²

§ 1609. The only case, therefore, in which the Court would interfere appears to be when the applicant is acting on private grounds only. "It might well be conceived," said Lord Hatherley (then Wood V.C.) in one case, "that where a tenant for life had stipulated that he would not apply for a private Act, he might be restrained from so doing. If a man had made an agreement to buy a house or field, and afterwards found the agreement inconvenient, and wished to apply to Parliament to set it aside, that possibly might be a case in which the Court would interfere, and say that this not being a matter of public policy, the man should not make the application.”¹

OF CONTRACTS TO INDEMNIFY.

PART VI.
Ch. xi.
The jurisdiction.

§ 1610. AGREEMENTS for indemnity, whether taking the form of a covenant or of an executory contract, appear equally to attract the jurisdiction of the Court by way of specific relief.¹ All or most of the reported cases appear to be on executed contracts.

§ 1611. A contract by A. to indemnify B. against a payment is not broken till the payment has been made: and when made by B., he might, before the Judicature Acts, have recovered the amount paid by an action at Law, and have obtained in that way all that he needed.

But where the contract by A. is to indemnify B. against all claims and demands of C., there is a breach so soon as C. makes the claim,² and B. may here usefully invoke the aid of a Court of Equity to compel A. to satisfy his demand to the relief of B., and thus specifically to perform the contract: and accordingly, in such cases, the Court of Chancery entertained jurisdiction.

Ranelagh
v. Hayes.

§ 1612. In the case of *Ranelagh v. Hayes*³ the plaintiff assigned certain shares to the defendant, and the defendant covenanted with the plaintiff to indemnify him against (amongst other things) all demands in respect of the shares: the plaintiff was prosecuted for a demand by the Crown, and accordingly prayed specific performance, which was granted. The decree extended not only to the claim then advanced but to future demands, and directed the Master, toties quoties any breach should happen, to report it to the Court. It is conceived that such a judgment could not now be pronounced as regards future and repeated acts.¹

§ 1613. In a much more recent case, Company A. assigned its business to Company B., and Company B. covenanted with Company A. that the shareholders of Company A. should out of the funds of Company B. be indemnified against all liabilities in respect of Company A. Actions and suits were instituted by various persons against Company A. in respect of claims against which the indemnity had been given, and these were not paid by Company B. Company A. thereupon sued for and obtained a declaration of the liability of Company B. to perform their indemnity.²

ADDITIONAL NOTE A.

THE CASE OF BOLTON PARTNERS v. LAMBERT.

THIS case, reported 41 Ch. D. 295 (followed by the Court of Appeal in In re Portuguese Copper Mines, Limited, Ex parte Badman, 45 Ch. D. 161), seems so important and so worthy of further consideration by any Court not bound by it, that I venture to offer a few respectful criticisms upon it. In the case in question an offer was made by the defendant to one Scratchley, as the managing director of the plaintiff company: Scratchley had no authority to accept the offer, but nevertheless accepted the offer; the defendant then withdrew his offer; and after the withdrawal the plaintiffs ratified Scratchley's acceptance. It was held that the withdrawal by the defendant was inoperative. The decision seems to raise some difficulties, both practical and legal. It seems to follow from it that the intervention of a mere stranger may prevent a person who has made an offer from withdrawing that offer until it be seen whether the person to whom it is made will ratify it or not, and consequently places that person in the difficult position of neither having a contract nor a right to withdraw an offer. An offer made to a principal may be withdrawn: an offer made to a person who professes to be an agent, but is not, cannot be withdrawn; so that the person making the offer is worse off in the latter than the former case. At the time the defendant, in the case under discussion, withdrew his offer, there was nothing but the action of a stranger, and it seems difficult to suppose that that could deprive the defendant of his common law right to withdraw an offer before acceptance. At the time the plaintiffs ratified the action of the stranger, an act had been done by the defendant in exercise of that right, and it seems difficult to suppose that subsequent ratification could destroy the operation of an act otherwise valid. In a case in which it was unsuccessfully contended that subsequent ratification of a notice to determine a lease could make it good, Lawrence J. said, "The rule of law that omnis ratihabitio retrotrahitur, &c., seems only applicable to cases where the conduct of the parties on whom it is to operate, not being referable to any agreement, cannot in the meantime depend on whether there be a subsequent ratification. But here the intermediate acts of the tenant referable to the terms of his lease are to be affected by relation."¹ And it is apprehended that in a general way ratification is not permitted to avoid and defeat prior acts validly done or rights previously vested.

The effect of the act of the stranger on the offer of the defendant is thus explained by the Court. "I think," said Cotton L.J., "the proper view is that the acceptance by Scratchley did constitute a contract, subject to its being shown that Scratchley had authority to bind the company." "Directly Scratchley, on behalf and in the name of the plaintiffs," said Lopes L.J., "accepted the defendant's offer, I think there was a contract made by Scratchley assuming to act for the plaintiffs, subject to proof by the plaintiffs that Scratchley had that authority."

These passages seem to suggest a new view of the constitution of a contract. For at the moment of Scratchley's act (his so-called acceptance), it is said that a contract was constituted, subject, indeed, to something, but still a contract. Now, at that moment, the plaintiffs, to whom the offer was made, had exercised no will, and given no consent to the proposal; so that if a contract was then made it was constituted without the will of one of the contracting parties, and at the will of a stranger.

But the contract so constituted was subject to its being shown that Scratchley had authority to bind the plaintiffs: i. e., as I understand, that the contract was subject to a condition: the condition cannot be the proof that Scratchley was authorized at the moment of his so-called acceptance; for in the case before the Court that was not the case, and therefore never could be proved. The condition cannot be a condition precedent, for then there would have been no contract; it must therefore be a condition subsequent, and a condition subsequent cannot make good that to which it is appended, but may avoid it. It is apprehended, therefore, that the real meaning of the learned Judges was that the contract would be avoided if it were not shown within a reasonable time that Scratchley's act had been ratified. So that the contract was contingent upon a subsequent expression of will of one of the contracting parties, and existed as a contract before that will was exercised or expressed.

If the principle of this case should ever come before a Court not bound by it, it may be worthy of consideration whether it should not receive further discussion.

ADDITIONAL NOTE B.

FRENCH LAW OF SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

THE peculiarly English character of the jurisdiction in specific performance has been adverted to above (§ 5). The following further information with regard to the French law may not be uninteresting. The following clauses of the Code Civil bear upon the point:—

“1142. Toute obligation de faire ou de ne pas faire se résout en dommages et intérêts, en cas d’inexécution de la part du débiteur.

“1143. Néanmoins le créancier a le droit de demander, que ce qui aurait été fait par contravention à l’engagement soit détruit; et il peut se faire autoriser à le détruire aux dépens du débiteur, sans préjudice des dommages et intérêts, s’il y a lieu.

“1144. Le créancier peut aussi, en cas d’inexécution, être autorisé à faire exécuter lui-même l’obligation aux dépens du débiteur.”

Through the kindness of Professor Holland, of Oxford, I have received the following note explanatory of the subject from M. Renault, Advocate and Professor of Law at Paris:—

“Le débiteur peut-il être tenu à une exécution en nature (specific performance), ou peut-il être seulement condamné à des dommages-intérêts?

“Les principes sont posés dans les articles 1142, 1143, et 1144, du Code Civil. Ces trois articles doivent être combinés, et il en résulte une doctrine qui peut être résumée de la manière suivante:—

“La formule de l’art. 1142 est trop générale: ce n’est pas toute obligation de faire ou de ne pas faire qui se résout nécessairement en dommages-intérêts, c’est celle dont l’exécution effective est impossible par voie de contrainte, parce que cette exécution forcée ne pourrait être obtenue sans porter atteinte à la liberté individuelle du débiteur, sans exercer une pression matérielle sur sa personne. Ainsi un acteur a promis à un directeur de chanter sur son théâtre, ou, au contraire, de ne pas paraître sur une scène rivale ; s'il refuse de tenir ses engagements, le créancier ne pourrait obtenir l'exécution effective sans être autorisé à exercer sur la personne de son débiteur des violences physiques pour l'amener de force sur son théâtre, ou pour l'écarter du théâtre rival. Ces violences, cette contrainte physique dont les résultats ne pourraient être que fort imparfaits, sont contraires à l'esprit et au texte de toute notre législation, et c'est dans ces cas-là que l'obligation se résout nécessairement en dommages-intérêts.

“ Un propriétaire a promis à son voisin d'abattre des arbres qu'il a sur son propre terrain, et qui font obstacle à la vue de ce voisin. Si, se repentant de cette promesse, et disposé à faire de grands sacrifices d'argent pour conserver ses arbres, le débiteur refuse d'exécuter son obligation, le créancier pourra ne pas se contenter des dommages-intérêts ; il obtiendra l'autorisation d'entrer sur le fond de son débiteur, et de faire abattre les arbres.

“ Pour les détails, voir le Répertoire de Dalloz, 33^{me} volume, au mot Obligation, § 702 et suivant. Pothier, Traité des Obligations, N° 146 et suivant.”

Sir Frederick Pollock has favoured me with a note on this subject, in which he expresses his belief that M. Renault has not dealt with the entire subject, and has confined his attention to the obligation “de faire ou de ne pas faire,” and omitted to consider the obligation “de donner,” which would in part correspond to our doctrine of specific performance.

Professor Holland has also reconsidered the subject in a note to the 5th edition of his work on jurisprudence, and his conclusions tend to emphasize the distinction in this respect between the laws of the two countries.

It is beyond my object and my knowledge to attempt an exact comparison of the English law with that of Rome or of France, or to ascertain how far the latter may have approximated to the principles of our Equity jurisdiction in specific performance. But it would appear as if the French law was still limited by that tenderness for the liberty of the subject which the old Common Law judges urged as an objection to the Chancery jurisdiction which might end in imprisonment. (See the case of Bramage v. Gennings, referred to in the next additional note.)

ADDITIONAL NOTE C.

CASES ILLUSTRATIVE OF THE EARLY JURISDICTION OF CHANCERY IN SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

(i) RICHARD II.—Wheler v. Huchynden (2 Calendar of Proceedings in Chancery, 2). The plaintiff averred an agreement between the plaintiff and defendant that the defendant should grant to the plaintiff the reversion of certain lands; that the defendant lent to the plaintiff the deeds to enable him to obtain advice as to the conveyance; that the plaintiff came to London for such advice and incurred expenses, and then the defendant refused to convey, and the plaintiff accordingly sought the Chancellor's aid, alleging that, as he had no specialty or writing of the covenant, he could not sue at Common Law. He asked for judgment according to that which loyalty, good faith, and conscience demanded in all parts for the love of God and in the work of Charity. It has been suggested¹ that the relief sought was not specific performance of the covenant or contract, but repayment of the plaintiff's expenses. But it may be doubted whether the plaintiff did not seek a wider relief. Whether he obtained any or what relief does not appear.

(ii) Henry VI. (no year.)—John Jonesse v. John Peneley and Wm. Peneley (2 Calendar, 35), is a suit on a contract entered into between Wm. Peneley and the plaintiff for the sale of a house and garden at Berkhamstead, of which John Peneley was feoffee to the use of Wm. Peneley, in which the plaintiff alleged that the purchase-money had been partly paid.

(iii) Henry VI. (no year.)—Furby v. Martin and Bamme (2 Calendar, 40). A very similar case to Jonesse v. Peneley, but in this case the sale was of a manor, and the time for completion at the place fixed, viz., the parish church, had passed, and no deed had been executed.

(iv) 27th Henry VI.—Lord Scales v. Dame Katherine Felbrigge and John Dame (2 Calendar, 26), was a suit brought to compel the defendants to make an estate to the plaintiff in reversion, in accordance with a purchase on which the plaintiff alleged that he had paid the purchase-money. A decree was made.

(v) Year Book, 8th Edw. IV. 11, pl. 4 B.—The defendant had promised the plaintiff per fidem to indemnify him in his occupation of the defendant's benefice, as proctor for the defendant: the defendant made default, and thereupon the plaintiff sued out a subpoena in Chancery. Genney, who appeared for the defendant, raised various objections, as that by reason of the pledge of faith the proceeding ought to have been in the Court Christian, and not in Chancery, and that it was the plaintiff's own folly that the promise was not in a deed on which an action at law might have been maintained. But the Chancellor overruled all these objections, and said that the plaintiff should have relief in Chancery. Genney, in the course of the argument, admitted that if I promise you to build you a house or to make over a house to you (de faire a vous un meason), and break the promise, you shall have remedy by subpoena.¹ The case is interesting as showing the connection of the jurisdiction in specific performance with the old jurisdiction of the Ecclesiastical Courts in cases of Læsio fidei.

(vi) Year Book, 21st Henry VII. 41, pl. 66.—In this case Fineux C.J., in discussing the extent of the action on the case observed, that if one bargains with me that I shall have his land to me and my heirs for 20*l.*, and that he will make the estate over to me, and I pay the 20*l.*, but he will not make over the estate to me according to the covenant, I may have an action on the case and am not bound to sue out a subpoena.

(vii) 1 Edw. VI.—Carrington v. Humphrey, Tothill, 14.

(viii) 11 & 12 Eliz.—Pope v. Mason, Tothill, 3.

(ix) 12 Eliz.—Hungerford v. Hutton, Tothill, 62.

(x) 25 Eliz.—Benther v. Denlon, Tothill, 3.

(xi) 29 Eliz.—King v. Roydon (the Practice of the High Court of Chancery, 1672, p. 42 b).

(xii) 41 Eliz.—Beeston v. Langford, Tothill, 14.

¹ This is, I believe, a fair statement of the case, but in points I feel some uncertainty.

(xiii) 7th James I.—Throckmorton v. Throckmorton, Tothill, 4. This case is interesting, as the decree is said to have been made by the judges' advice.

(xiv) 11th James I.—Bates v. Heard, Tothill, 4.

(xv) (undated).—Foster v. Eltonhead, Tothill, 4.

(xvi) 14th James I.—Bromage v. Gennings, Rolle, 354, 368. Bromage sued Gennings in the Court of the Marches of Wales for not executing a lease according to his bargain, and from the statement of the plaintiff's counsel it appears to have been a suit for specific performance, and not to recover damages, and this, he added, is usually done in Chancery. Thereupon the defendant moved for a prohibition and obtained it, Coke, Doddridge, and Haughton saying that Chancery ought not to do so, for then to what purpose are the actions on the case and covenant? and Coke added that this would subvert the interest of the covenantor, who understands that it is at his election either to lose the damages or to make the lease. Doddridge observed that if a decree was made for the execution of the lease, and he did not choose to execute it, there would be no other remedy than imprisonment. So complete was the unanimity of feeling in the Court, that Serjeant Harris, the plaintiff's counsel, said that the part he took in the matter was against his conscience.
